

Italian Party Chief, in One-Man Drive, Seeks a National Consensus on Policy

By ALVIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times

ROME, April 6—Along with daily predictions of an impending collapse of Italy, a one-man campaign has been under way to try to bring politicians and union leaders together on how to insure economic survival.

For days now, Ugo La Malfa, the president of the small but respected Republican Party and a well-known figure in Italian politics, has been talking with Communists, Christian Democrats, Socialists, economists, trade union leaders, businessmen and others. It has not been an easy job for the 72-year-old economist, but at least he has received credit for a good try if nothing else.

"Someone has to do something," Mr. La Malfa said in an interview. "When the Government suggests curtailing wage increases, it gets no response. When public spending is rising and rising, the Government seems impotent to deal with the problem. This is a country that could have a great future and now it is destroying itself. No political party really seems to do anything because no one wants to be unpopular."

Shared Unpopularity an Aim
One purpose of what Mr. La Malfa calls his "desperate move" is to persuade the politicians and the unions' leaders to become unpopular together. In particular, he has been seeking agreement on ways to curb wages, which are rising faster here than anywhere else in Europe, and reduce public spending.

"The idea is to work for some consensus primarily on those two issues," said Mr. La Malfa, a former budget minister who has served in Parliament since the end of World War II. "I have been working outside Parliament, outside Government, dealing directly with political parties and the unions. If the political forces love this country, they should be willing to save it in time," he said.

Mr. La Malfa's task, difficult at best, reflects the frustration and concern of many over the state of the economy. The weak minority Government of the Christian Democrats recently announced an austerity program, including a credit squeeze and higher taxes on gasoline and other consumer items, but found itself unable to prevent economic decline.

Plan Widely Publicized
The reaction to the "La Malfa Plan," which has received wide publicity in newspapers on the political left, has been political tension. He remains deeply worried about the economic trends, and the new political uncertainty is contributing to the economic and monetary troubles.

With the lire now devalued by more than 20 percent since mid-January—it dropped again this week—the cost of imports is rising and so are prices. Inflation, at a rate of about 12 percent last year, is expected to climb well above that in 1976. Industrial production was down, along with investments, but wage costs rose by some 25 percent and state spending jumped by 35 percent.

Curbs Felt Necessary
Like Mr. La Malfa, economists and business leaders argue that any solution must include some form of wage curbs. Giovanni Agnelli, the chairman of the giant automobile maker Fiat, has said that curbs on both spending and wages were vital for Italy's economic recovery.

"We always knew that this government was very weak," he said, referring to the administration of the Christian Democrats. "But it is one thing to be weak and another not to govern at all."

The Government, embattled over the abortion issue, beleaguered by the economic crisis and under political pressure from the Communists, meets with the unions this week to discuss the current round of wage negotiations involving millions of workers. Few here, including Mr. La Malfa, give it much hope of winning any agreement on wage restraint.

"We have to get out of this crisis quickly," said Mr. La Malfa. "We have to find a way out. If the attempts fail, we are lost."

In 1942, eight Nazi agents were captured soon after they landed in America. One was not.

21 Who Escaped Spanish Prison Are Captured at French Border

By HENRY GINGER
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, April 6—The Spanish Civil Guard captured 21 escaped prisoners near the French border today after gun battles in which one prisoner was killed. Seven other escaped prisoners were still at large tonight.

The prisoners escaped yesterday from a prison in Segovia, near Madrid.

The capture of the 21 prisoners, most of them Basque nationalists serving long terms for terrorist acts, came in a densely wooded hills near Roncesvalles, in the province of Navarre about a half hour's walk from the French frontier.

The 29 prisoners, originally reported to be 31, made their way out of the prison through the Segovia sewer system and were believed to have gone north in a large trailer truck.

Once in the Basque country they sought to cross into France with a guide, but one report said they had become lost in dense fog. Basque accomplices on the French side opened fire when patrols intercepted the escapees and one member of the Spanish Civil Guard was wounded.

Escaped in Rest Period
The embarrassed Government broke its silence tonight, 31 hours after the escape, with a statement by the Ministry of Justice. The ministry said the prisoners had escaped during a one-hour leisure period between the end of lunch and the daily check at 3 P.M.

Before prison authorities discovered the escape, almost half the 60 men in the prison had gone through a series of tunnels and conduits that led them to the city's outskirts.

Earlier yesterday, in the continuing struggle between E.T.A., the Basque nationalist organization, and the Spanish Government, about 50 suspects of the group were arrested in the Basque region. This followed the abduction last Sunday of two Spanish policemen as they emerged from a movie theater in the French Basque frontier town of Hendaye.

Tonight, four explosive charges were discovered on railroad tracks at the station of Hernani near San Sebastián and a bomb was found before it could explode in the town hall of Zumarraga, also near San Sebastián. An arms cache was found and seized midway between Bilbao and San Sebastián.

The continuing Basque activity is said to have strengthened the hand of rightist groups opposed to any partial concessions that would weaken the system created by the late Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

There has been a stiffening of attitudes by foes and supporters of the government, and this has caused concern about the country's ability to carry out peaceful political changes.

"I believe that if we continue to move toward a radicalization of political positions, peaceful transition will become increasingly difficult," Alvaro Sánchez Terán, Governor of Barcelona Province, said today at a news conference.

The proponents and opponents of major change in the Spanish political system have tried to improve their positions in recent days. Leftists and liberals have achieved a unified organization called the Democratic Coordination, in which Communists, Socialists, Christian Democrats and Social Democrats, among others have agreed to work for early elections of an assembly to draft a new constitution. The Government, angered at its failure to keep this front split and the Communists isolated has resorted to oppressive methods with arrests and fines.

ARABS REMOVE 43 FROM BOYCOTT LIST

CAIRO, April 6 (AP)—The Arab economic boycott office has removed 43 companies from its anti-Israel blacklist but has decided not to make public the names of American companies removed from the list. Mohammed Mahgoub, head of the boycott office, said today.

The companies removed from the blacklist, during a 10-day semiannual meeting attended by the 20 Arab League member countries in Alexandria last week, included American, British, French, Japanese, Cypriot, Maltese, Italian, Swiss, Danish, Indian and Taiwanese companies and 128 branches, Mr. Mahgoub said.

Some of the companies removed included British Leyland, Philips Electric of the Netherlands, Ataka Textile of Japan, Needle Industries of Britain, Anastasia Exports of Malta and Santa Textile of Taiwan.

Mr. Mahgoub said Volkswagen, the West German automaker, had been given six months to produce more documents before it would be removed from the blacklist.

Use of Chou's Name in Struggle To Thwart Maoist Faction Seen

By JOSEPH LELYVELD
Special to The New York Times

Syrian-supported As Saïqa Palestinian guerrillas stands guard across toma in downtown Beirut. Gummens looted the bank late Monday night.

the ideological cleavages are probably less severe than the personal resentments that now divide the top leadership. A wall poster read by foreigners in Peking recently offers a glimpse of this rancor. Ostensibly an attack on Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, who is described as a "dowager empress," the poster goes on to celebrate the virtues of Chairman Mao's first wife, Yang Kai-hui. No informed Chinese would fail to understand that it was Chiang Ching—the present Mrs. Mao and a leader of the "radicals"—who was really the target.

Army Not Yet Involved

In the past, the task of smoothing over the ensions within the leadership fell to Mr. Chou, an incomparable diplomat. In that role he has no obvious successor. Thus, if the current struggle is allowed to continue much longer, the task of imposing unity could fall to the People's Liberation Army, which has yet to become involved in the campaign against "capitalist roaders."

Teng Under Attack

Mr. Mao was said to have given his blessing to the campaign against "unrepentant capitalist roaders" in the leadership that was begun after Mr. Chou's death from cancer on Jan. 8. The immediate target of the campaign has been Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping, who was presumed to be Mr. Chou's own choice as a successor.

More generally, the campaign challenged the deceased leader's meticulously laid plans for an orderly succession. Mr. Chou had attempted to yoke the competing factions in a collective leadership that would somehow put the bitter legacy of the Cultural Revolution behind it. But his choice of Mr. Teng—a former secretary general of the Communist Party who was re-elected and purged during the Cultural Revolution—was a sign to the so-called "radicals" that only lip service would now be paid to that movement's values.

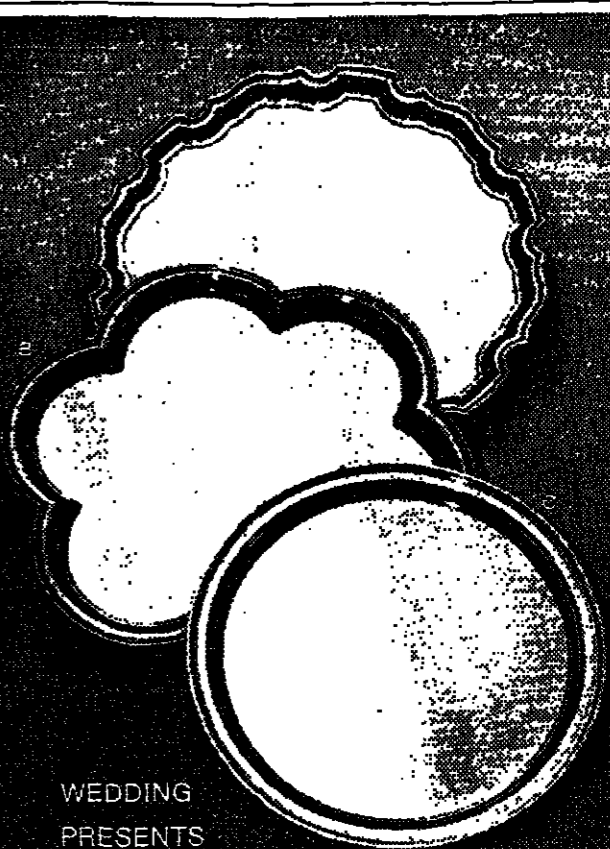

The clash of values extends to the most sensitive economic and social issues China faces, with one side stressing the need for disciplined organization and the other emphasizing the importance of aroused mass participation. But deep as they are, the ideological cleavages are probably less severe than the personal resentments that now divide the top leadership. A wall poster read by foreigners in Peking recently offers a glimpse of this rancor. Ostensibly an attack on Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, who is described as a "dowager empress," the poster goes on to celebrate the virtues of Chairman Mao's first wife, Yang Kai-hui. No informed Chinese would fail to understand that it was Chiang Ching—the present Mrs. Mao and a leader of the "radicals"—who was really the target.

and government officials who had been disgraced in the Cultural Revolution. The first signs of counter-attack were seen in wall posters in Nanking that assailed the newspaper Wen Hui Pao of Shanghai for blaspheming against the memory of Mr. Chou. Shanghai has been a "radical" stronghold since the start of the Cultural Revolution and the paper has consistently allied itself with Miss Chiang and her allies. Emotional attachment to Mr. Chou, who evoked deep admiration from most Chinese, provided a basis for the counter-attack. Its tactical aim, experts speculated, was to demonstrate to the "radicals" how easy it would be to arouse mass emotions against them. "The moderates are showing that Mao can play this game," an analyst said.

Most politically alert Chinese are permanently attached to neither the "radicals" nor the leadership that can be discerned in the Peking leadership. Even in describing the leadership, the neat assumption that there are only two factions is probably a reflection of Chairman Mao's customary emphasis of the "two-line struggle" between left and right rather than a description of reality.

But in periods of tension and struggle, it becomes increasingly difficult for party and government officials throughout the country to steer clear of controversy. Thus the attacks on Mr. Teng were quickly followed in a number of provinces by attacks on rehabilitated officials who were described as his "followers." These persons were then forced to defend themselves.

Le Set Talks to Replace President

for a year, causing thousands of deaths and widespread destruction.
Kamal Jumblatt, leader of the leftist forces that lately have made inroads into Christian-held territory in Beirut and the mountains, has proclaimed a 10-day truce to give Parliament time to choose a successor to Mr. Franjieh.
The Constitution stipulates that the 89-member Parliament elect a new President one or two months before the expiration of his six-year term. The amendment would permit an exception to allow the immediate replacement of Mr. Franjieh, whose term expires Sept. 23.
Mr. Assad said that "all parties" had agreed to meet at the villa erected by a Lebanese cotton magnate, rather than at the looted downtown Parliament building, which is a target for snipers.
But shortly after he announced the agreement, shooting broke out not far from the Esseily mansion, which is on the one Beirut avenue used by the brave, or the foolhardy, to cross from the western, heavily Moslem quarters of the capital to the eastern, largely Christian neighborhoods.

Late this afternoon, there was a gun battle in an area between the Christian and Moslem areas of Beirut, reportedly between guerrillas of the Saïqa organization and Lebanese leftist and left-wing Palestinian groups.
As night fell, some shooting was still reported in the area.
British to Protest to Syria
LONDON, April 6 (Reuters)—Britain is to make strong representations to Syria about reports that a British container ship, Cheshire Venture, was fired on yesterday in Lebanese waters by ships flying the Syrian flag, officials here said today.
The officials said that the ship had been hit seven times. There were no casualties.

in Peking Believed Moving

that some had been brought in to participate in some sort of political rally.
Monday's demonstrations, which were allowed to continue until late evening when militiamen cleared the square, appeared to be a reaction to the so-called antirightist campaign begun by senior party radicals after the death of Mr. Chou in January.
The late Prime Minister's protégé, the senior Deputy Prime Minister, Teng Hsiao-ping, became the campaign's chief target, and he has been increasingly accused of trying to lead China back onto the "capitalist road." Another Deputy Prime Minister, Hua Kuo-fong, received the post of Acting Prime Minister expected to get.
The Jenmin Jih Pao editorial, which appeared only a few hours after the violence of Monday had ended, called for the entire Communist Party to turn against the "capitalist roaders."

Attacking Mr. Teng and his supporters, the editorial condemned what it called the "handful of class enemies who fabricated political rumors in an attempt to confuse and poison people's minds and attack and split the party Central Committee headed by Chairman Mao."
Tass Sees Anti-Mao Protest
MOSCOW, April 6 (Reuters)—The Soviet press agency Tass today described yesterday's disturbances in Peking as a "spontaneous protest" by Chinese citizens against the Maoist regime and its policies.

Help Sought for Wild Birds of Greece

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

PRESPA LAKES, Greece—The wild mountain lakes here are so remote that during the Greek civil war Communist guerrillas made their headquarters in a nearby village. Today the lakes are inhabited by gentler creatures, more than 100 kinds of water birds.

But civilization is starting to intrude, and plans for tourist development are afoot. At the same time, local villagers cannot afford and have not been taught about environmental protection.

Greek naturalists feel that more should be done to protect the area and its birds, and Government officials agree. But in a relatively poor country like Greece, pressures for economic growth are very strong.

"This is not a problem only in Greece, but fortunately, here we still have something to save," said Byron Antipas, secretary general of the Greek Society for the Protection of Nature. "Greece," he said, "is trying to develop as much as it can, and we are trying to persuade the Government that when they make decisions they should also keep protection of the environment in mind."

As Pollution Spread

Ten years ago problems of pollution and preservation were practically unknown in Greece. Today industry is pouring waste into the Thracian Gulf, and the famous mussels of Salonika are inedible. The bay of Salamis, near Athens, is virtually dead. Vast wetlands have been drained, depriving birds of their feeding grounds. The wolves of Epirus and the wild goats of Crete are threatened with extinction.

Forty years ago, ornithologists found few birds here. But as other habitats were destroyed elsewhere in Europe, the lakes became more popular with birds.

The smaller of the two lakes here has vast shallow areas, reeds that provide cover and plankton that provides food. The white and Dalmatian pelicans are thought to nest nowhere else in Western Europe. By one estimate, 13 of the 28 kinds of birds on the endangered list of the Council of Europe either stop off during their migratory journeys or live here the year round.

A Park in Name Only

On a recent afternoon a flock of black cormorants warmed themselves in the early spring sun. Long-legged waders pecked at the water. Several glossy ducks bobbed on the surface. A flight of herons took wing. A lone white pelican, lordly and lazy, drifted out of the bright sky and settled in its nest among the reeds.

After considerable pressure from European naturalists, hunting was prohibited near the nesting grounds in 1971.

In 1974, the whole area was declared a national park. Two years later, it is a park in name only.

One game warden has to guard the entire district. No specific regulations governing park use have been issued.

Jobs are badly needed in the area and tourism offers rich prospects. The provincial administrator said proudly that an American company was interested in building a $200 million complex that would include hotels, an airport and a casino.

"The Bird Is Their Enemy"

Strict regulations would be difficult to enforce. According to a forest ranger assigned here, the villagers are too used to chopping wood for fires, cutting reeds for mats and baskets, allowing their animals to graze near the lake shore, and hunting the geese and ducks for food.

"People here have not yet visualized the importance of wildlife," said Pericles Kollas, a member of the nature society. "They are conditioned to care for animals only as long as they are of use. The bird is their enemy because it eats fruit and fish."

"We don't want to stop development," said a Government official in Athens, "but there's a lot we can do, once we know the problem. We have to find a balance between our two objectives—development and protection."

Cambodian Government Quits; Assembly to Pick New Regime

BANGKOK, Thailand, Wednesday, April 7 (UPI)—The Cambodian Cabinet resigned today and will be replaced by appointees of the newly elected National Assembly, prime Minister Penn Nouth said.

In a broadcast over Radio Phnom Penh, monitored here, the Prime Minister said that the Government "had completely fulfilled its task" by organizing the nation after the communist takeover last April 17.

There was no indication who would form the new cabinet. The announcement said that the resignations took effect yesterday, but gave no hint when a new administration would be formed. Mr. Penn Nouth was a Prime of $8,000 a year.

Minister in cabinets of Prince Norodom Sihanouk. But the rest of the Government that has ruled for the last year was made up almost exclusively of hard-line, pro-Communist or Communist officials.

"The mission of the present Government of democratic Cambodia is completed," Mr. Penn Nouth said in the radio broadcast.

"The entire Cabinet therefore announces its resignation as of this moment, so the Cambodian people's representative assembly may proceed with the formation of a new government."

Resignation of the cabinet followed by two days the announcement that Prince Sihanouk himself had decided to step down as Chief of State and retire on a state pension.

Soviet Is Expected to Try Three In Separate Cases of Dissidence

By DAVID K. SHIPLER

MOSCOW, April 6 — Three land from which they were political dissidents are expected expelled in 1944 by Soviet authorities. He has been charged to go on trial in separate Soviet courtsrooms within the next 10 days.

The most prominent is Andrei D. Sakharov, the dissident physicist who won the Nobel Peace Prize last year, charged with slandering the Soviet state.

Mr. Tverdokhlebov, a 36-year-old physicist, is accused specifically of spreading the "rumor" that another dissident, Leonid Plyushch, was not mentally ill when he was incarcerated in a mental hospital in 1972.

Mr. Plyushch was released in January and allowed to go to France after the French Communist Party, in a major trial with Moscow, intervened on his behalf and criticized the Soviet Government for its treatment of him. In Paris.

Mr. Tverdokhlebov's trial, scheduled to begin today, drew a crowd of about 30 friends and supporters and 10 Western correspondents, who milled around outside the pale green courthouse in the Lyubino section of southeast Moscow.

But the trial was postponed ostensibly because of the illness of the judge. At the same time, in the Siberian city of Omsk, the trial of a dissident Tatar, Mustafa Dzhemilev, was put off for a day because the defendant's lawyer, who had evidently been told the trial would be held later, was not present.

Mr. Dzhemilev, who has been arrested repeatedly since 1968, had campaigned for the right of Crimean Tatars living in Central Asia to return to the but who knows," he said.

According to Valentin Turchin, a prominent dissident who is president of the Soviet chapter of Amnesty International, a trial is also scheduled to begin April 14 in Vilna, Lithuania, of a witness at a previous political trial who refused to testify against his friend.

The incident took place, Mr. Turchin said, during the trial of last December of Sergei A. Kobaliev, a member of the Amneste league of Dr. Sakharov in the Soviet human rights movement.

Mr. Kobaliev was sentenced to seven years in a strict-regime labor camp, followed by three years of exile.

The witness, Valeriy Merechin, refused to testify, on the charge that Mr. Kobaliev had given him a copy of Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn's "Gulag Archipelago" to be copied and distributed. The book, banned in the Soviet Union, is a detailed history of Stalinist political oppression.

Mr. Merechin is now being charged with refusal to testify, Mr. Turchin said, an infraction that carries only a fine of up to 25 per cent of six months' salary. But the concern, Mr. Turchin explained, is that the trial will be broadened to include Mr. Merechin's dissident activities.

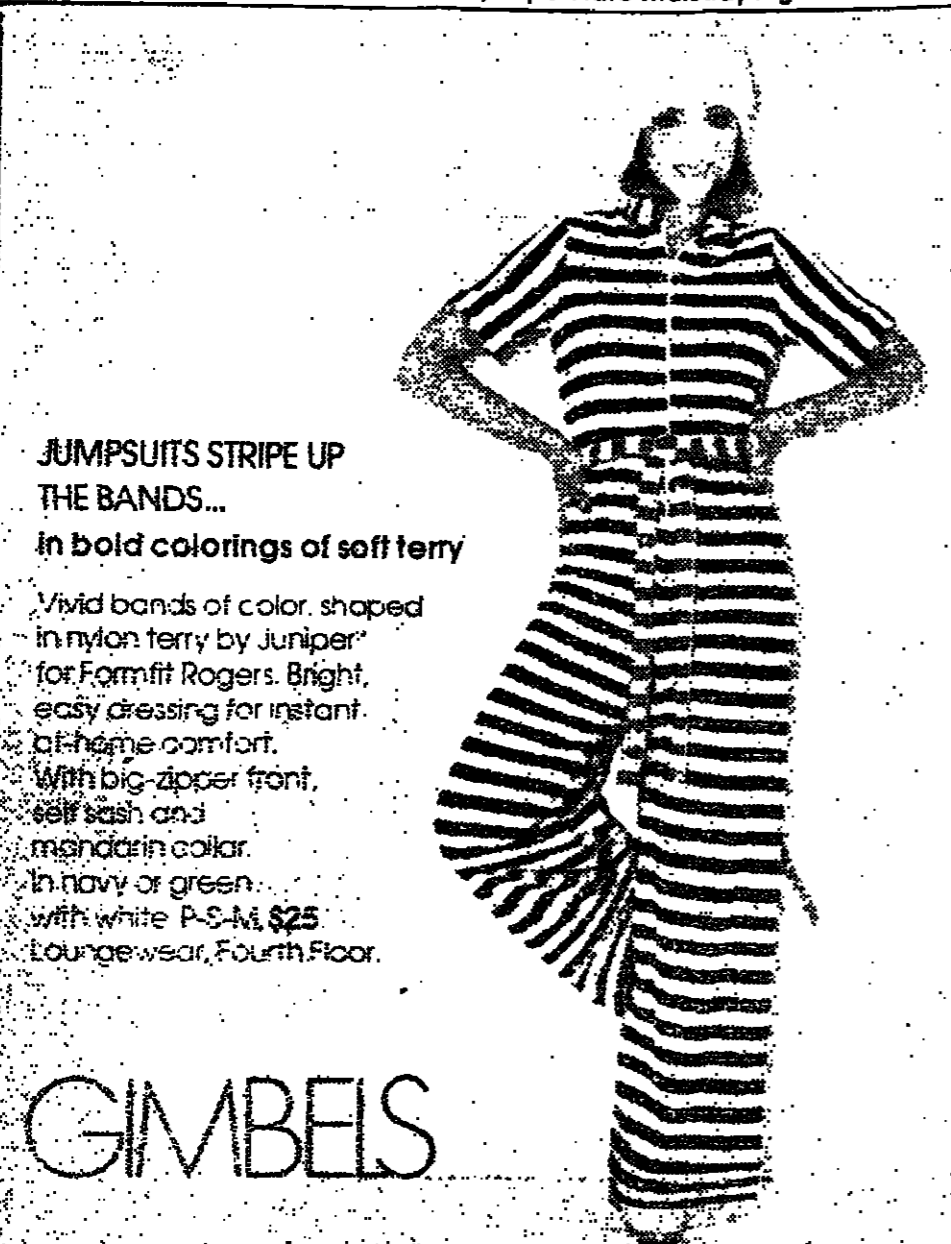

"We hope it won't happen. Central Asia to return to the but who knows," he said.

Don't be a shy one. Spring it on the world today.

Tell every soul who sees you how happy you are to be alive alive-o now that April's here. And you don't have to say a single word; your designer scarf will do it for you, naturally.

To give you an idea of how easy it is to go on a spring fling, we've picked a few blossoms and beasties from a bounteous, beauteous collection that's bustin' out all over our accessories shop.

Now, as you well know, the fashion thing this spring is "back to nature." That's why everything here is pure, natural cotton. Nothing fake-o. And all these pretty prints are of real, live-and-let-live things. (Yea for ecology.)

We've sketched some suggestions on how you might want to flaunt spring. But with your fine mind, no doubt you'll come up with dozens more.

- A. Make a shoulder shelter of ripe cherries. By Daniel La Foret for Ken Scott. 45 inches of pink, turquoise or yellow tones. 36.00.
- B. Do a hip-wrap of wild flora and fauna, imported from Italy. 36 inches of bright color on purple, mint green or red grounds. 14.00.
- C. Cover your coif with 27 inches of tiny leaves and flowerets. By Anne Klein for Robinson and Golluber in cream - with royal, maize with coral or periwinkle with rust. 6.00.
- D. Tie a kerchief of fruit and flowers from Italy. 27 inches of blue and rose, beige and purple or maize and orange. 6.00.
- E. Sport Bill Bliss around your throat, your wrist, your ankle etc. Here, two scarves; each 22 inches. Have the striped-border floral in red, navy or black, all with white. Or the fauvist flowers in yellow with navy, blue with red, or beige with brown. Each 6.00.

You can do whatever scarf trick your happy heart dictates. But do it today: spring won't wait for you. (We will, though. Demonstrations today from 12 till 2 on the main floor.)

Group of Japanese Asks Help of Ford In Lockheed Scandal

Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, April 6—A number of Japanese television personalities, writers, artists, editors, critics, comedians and scholars have contributed $165 apiece to publish an advertisement in The New York Times addressed to President Ford and the American people.

The advertisement appears on page 38 of today's issue. The Japanese group, calling itself the Ad Hoc Committee to Uncover the Lockheed Scandal, asked President Ford to reverse a decision under which restrictions have been placed on materials being furnished to the United States.

Those materials include documents of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation provided by the Securities and Exchange Commission that may give Japanese Government officials alleged to have taken bribes to in return for promoting the sale of Lockheed airplanes here, and even the officials' names. The Ad Hoc Committee of 23 persons asked the American people to back their appeal by writing, telegraphing or telephoning Mr. Ford. The group was organized by Koichi Baba, a television newscaster.

The advertisement says: "The great majority of the Japanese are deeply disturbed by the Lockheed scandal and are eager to investigate it in order to thoroughly reveal the guilt to the parties and lay the blame where it belongs."

Parliament Paralyzed Beyond that, the effort by the Japanese, who asserted that they were not connected with the Lockheed political party, appeared to reflect the continuing obsession of this nation with the Lockheed scandal. Since it broke two months ago with revelations before the Senate Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations, the Lockheed affair has paralyzed the Japanese Parliament, dominated the news and generally shaken the governing establishment. The advertisement also seems to reflect the frustration of some Japanese over the lack of progress in determining who may have violated the law or conducted himself in a way considered morally or politically improper. Tax and police officials have moved ahead methodically in an investigation of possible law breaking and have charged Yoshio Kodama, Lockheed's senior lobbyist here, with tax evasion.

But neither Parliament nor the political parties nor the press have uncovered anything significant in the two months. Many details of the scandal, and of persons alleged to have been connected with it, have been brought out, but there have been no major discoveries.

The Japanese group, calling itself the Ad Hoc Committee to Uncover the Lockheed Scandal, asked President Ford to reverse a decision under which restrictions have been placed on materials being furnished to the United States.

TV in Homes Called Useful in Tracking Paths of Tornadoes

Special to The New York Times

AUSTIN, Tex., April 6—An ordinary television set, if tuned properly, can be used to track tornadoes and perhaps save lives, according to the Texas Insurance Information Center.

The method is not foolproof, but it has been tested by the National Weather Service and recommended as a supplementary tracking device. It is known as the Weller Method, after Newton Weller of West Des Moines, an electronics engineer who began, in the 1980's, experiments in the electronic reactions caused by tornadoes.

The Weather Service has tested the Weller Method, and found it effective up to a radius of 15 to 20 miles. Instructions about adapting the Weller Method to the home television set have been published by the service, the Ohio Insurance Institute and the Texas Insurance Information Center. First, the instructions say, warm up your television as if you were going to tune contrast to the maximum position. Turn to Channel 13 just the brightest color screen is shown. Then turn to Channel 1 adjusting the picture. The audio settings must be just as desired.

If your area does a Channel 2, tune in or second television. Monitor the screen continuously as possible. It will appear as flashes or streaks. Set the streaks will be a tornado with a radius will make it glow brightly or darkened picture visible and remain visible. If this happens, indicate safety precautions turning the television opening windows to lessen potential danger pressure if a tornado is near.

Take cover in preferably near the bottom floor of a building. A closet or small room offers protection.

COUNCIL BROADENS CURB ON RHODESIA

U.N. Vote Bars Insurance and Other Benefits

By PAUL HOFMANN
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., April 6—The Security Council, in one of its infrequent unanimous decisions, today broadened the international sanctions against the white minority Government in Rhodesia by barring insurance and commercial licensing operations benefiting that country.

The measures approved by the Security Council expanded the embargo on trade and other transactions with Rhodesia that has been in force since 1968. Experts noted that the United Nations sanctions against Rhodesia had often been evaded and said that it seemed difficult to enforce fully the curbs adopted today.

The United States voted for the punitive measures together with all 14 other Council members, and also acted as a co-sponsor of the underlying resolution.

The document called on all member nations of the world organization not to permit their citizens and residents to insure any commodities or products exported from Rhodesia or to be imported into that country.

The resolution furthermore enjoined all United Nations members to prevent their citizens and residents from granting to any commercial or industrial undertaking in Rhodesia the right to use any trade name, trade mark or registered design. The provision was designed especially to hit franchising agreements.

The Security Council urged countries that are outside the world organization to take part in the boycott against Rhodesia. No nation was named, but the appeal was understood to be aimed especially at Switzerland, which has served as a base for business interests dealing with Rhodesia.

However, delegates and their economic advisers said they were fairly certain that today's decisions would heighten the difficulties of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's Government, and would shatter its hopes that the United Nations sanctions might eventually fade.

United Nations officials said tonight that it would be the responsibility of member countries to enact legislation or take administrative action to prohibit insurance or franchising deals with Rhodesia. United States interest in this area were said to be modest in comparison with British involvement.

The chief American delegate, William W. Scranton, told the Council that the United States was strongly opposed to the "illegal Smith regime" and fully supported the new sanctions.

Various delegates called on the United States to halt its imports of chrome from Rhodesia.

Eagleton Calls for Suspension of Pentagon Aid

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 6—Senator Thomas F. Eagleton, Democrat of Missouri, urged today that Malcolm R. Currie be suspended as director of defense research and engineering pending an investigation into whether the Pentagon official had been involved in a conflict of interest involving defense contractors.

In a letter to Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and in a speech on the Senate floor, Senator Eagleton said that Dr. Currie was operating under a "dark cloud of suspicion" about his impartiality in dealing with defense contractors.

The Senator referred to an article in The New York Times yesterday reporting that, immediately after returning from a visit to a fishing lodge in the Bahamas operated by the Rockwell International Corporation, Dr. Currie recommended a production go-ahead for a controversial missile being developed by Rockwell.

The Times article also said that about a year ago, Dr. Currie had "made the rounds" of defense contractors seeking future employment. Through a spokesman, Dr. Currie has denied that he showed any favoritism to Rockwell International, that he had sought prospective employment from defense contractors and that he had a job offer from Hughes Aircraft Corporation when he leaves his Pentagon post.

Fine and Reprimand

Dr. Currie was reprimanded and fined one month's pay by Mr. Rumsfeld for going to the Rockwell fishing lodge in violation of a Pentagon regulation on standards of conduct that prohibit defense employees from accepting hospitality from defense contractors.

In urging the suspension of Dr. Currie from his Pentagon post, Senator Eagleton said that the fine and reprimand administered by Mr. Rumsfeld were "not sufficient to clear this contaminated air."

"Whether or not there is a connection between Dr. Currie's Rockwell-sponsored vacation to Bahama and his decision to support [the Condor missile] or whether or not Dr. Currie was arranging his own prospective employment with defense contractors, the appearance of impropriety must now be dealt with forthwith," the Senator said.

William I. Greener, Mr. Rumsfeld's spokesman, had no immediate comment on the Eagle-ton letter and speech. Previously, however, Mr. Greener emphasized that Mr. Rumsfeld retained his confidence in Dr. Currie and had no intention of removing him from responsibility over weapons programs involving Rockwell International, such as the B-1 aircraft. As vice chairman of the Congressional Joint Committee on Defense Production, William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, raised the possibility of a Congressional investigation of Dr. Currie.

Liberties Leaders See 'Dangerous' Trend in High Court Curbs on Judicial Protection

U.S. Judge Denies Delay in Alaskan Oil-Lease Sale

BY OELSNER

Washington, April 6 (UPI)—If the trend continues—indeed, if it is not reversed—the American Civil Liberties Union and other legal groups believe that the protection of constitutional rights and liberties will be imperiled, and even other legal groups have people who will be unable to defend themselves against arbitrary and unconstitutional actions of state officials or to secure effective relief against state laws, the letter says.

The officials plan to have copies of the letter delivered to participants at a national conference of judges and law-journeymen that is to convene tomorrow in St. Paul.

The meeting is being sponsored by Chief Justice Warren

E. Burger, the president of the American Bar Association, and Lawrence E. Walsh, the chairman of the association of state chief justices, Chief Justice Charles S. House of Connecticut.

The meeting is entitled "The National Conference on the Causes of Popular Dissatisfaction with the Administration of Justice," for a famous speech of the same title given in 1906 by Roscoe Pound, the legal scholar and dean of the Harvard Law School. The speech has been credited with helping to bring about some major legal reforms, and the purpose of the conference is to determine what reforms are needed now.

A program for the conference lists two chief topics for the meeting's plenary sessions: "The Business of the Courts—What types of disputes are best resolved by judicial action and what kinds are better assigned to another, more appropriate forum?" and "Can the interest of justice be better served with processes less time-consuming and less expensive?"

An underlying theme thus appears to be whether at least some matters that now may be litigated in court should be removed from the court system.

The officials of the nine legal and public-interest groups are asking the conference members to include in their discussion the recent trend of Supreme Court decisions limiting access to the Federal courts.

"It is time for the Supreme Court to halt its retreat and to stand fast as a defender of rights, as it did from 1954 to 1970," the letter says. "Effective judicial remedies must be available to protect against deprivations of constitutional and statutory rights if our courts are to be the 'swift and certain agents of justice' ruling this winter that a Federal judge had overstepped his authority in ordering Philadelphia officials to institute new disciplinary methods for policemen."

The three-page letter describes a variety of recent rulings that have caused increasing concern among civil liberties groups and public-interest law groups.

The effect of the rulings is to limit the ability of citizens to bring lawsuits in Federal court seeking relief for alleged violations of their constitutional or statutory rights, particularly by such state and local officials as the police.

The rulings include limitations on class actions and a committee would enter the case and fishing villages there "into active politics" as permitted under Federal and state law.

WASHINGTON, April 6 (UPI)—Alaska lost today its bid in Federal District Court to delay the first sale of Federal oil leases on the outer continental shelf off Alaska's coast.

After hearing more than two hours of arguments by officials of the state and the village of Yakutat, Judge Joseph C. Waddy denied their request for a temporary injunction to delay the taking of bids.

Alaska and Yakutat contended that the sale should be delayed until the complex coastal ecology could be studied further and fishing villages there could prepare for the people expected to accompany oil exploration and development.

Senators, in Compromise, Back Less Stringent Food Stamp Bill

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, April 6 — Mr. Talmadge's Liberal senate forces struck a compromise today with the chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, Herman E. Talmadge, Democrat of Georgia, on a substitute food stamp reform bill, one less stringent than the bill currently being debated on the Senate floor.

The compromise measure, introduced today, represents an attempt by the liberals to win back some of the provisions they lost in committee changes in the bill under debate. But it would not result in a bill so generous that it could not withstand a Presidential veto, they believe.

The bipartisan liberal group has agreed not to fight to eliminate the purchase requirement in the food stamp program. That change, strongly opposed by Mr. Talmadge, would have allowed participating families to obtain part of the current food stamp allotment free, rather than making them pay discount prices to obtain the amount of stamps the Department of Agriculture says is needed to eat nutritiously—$166 a month for a family of four.

In return, Mr. Talmadge agreed to support the more liberal bill, which is the key to the Senate's overriding a possible veto.

The new compromise bill is sponsored by Republican Senators Robert Dole of Kansas, Charles H. Percy of Illinois, and Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the minority leader, and by Democrats Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, George McGovern of South Dakota and

It would save an estimated $241 million a year, its sponsors say, instead of the $630 million that was to be saved in the bill currently under consideration, a difference of $389 million.

The food stamp program serves 19 million people at an estimated cost of $3.8 billion a year. It is expected to cost $6.3 billion in the fiscal year 1977.

The compromise bill would set the purchase price of stamps at 25 percent of monthly net income, as against 27 1/2 percent in the bill under debate. The Administration would like a purchase price of 30 percent of net income. Under the present program a family pays up to 24 percent.

Incorporating an amendment offered by Senator Edward W. Brooke, Republican of Massachusetts, the substitute would eliminate the requirement that recipients reapply for stamps every 30 days. To do so would cost $100 million more in Administrative costs, Mr. Brooke said.

The substitute bill would count income tax rebates as assets, rather than income, so those lump sums would not be counted against families in determining eligibility.

The substitute bill limits participation in Puerto Rico and Guam, which have very high participation rates. The substitute will probably be taken up when the Senate finishes considering all of the 16 amendments offered by Senator Carl T. Curtis, Republican of Nebraska, which together would cut $2 billion from the program.

EASING OF RULES ON WATER SCORED

E.P.A. Official Fears Delays in Achieving Law's Goals

By E. W. KENWORTHY

WASHINGTON, April 6—The deputy administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency assailed today some of the recommendations made last month on Water Quality to amend the Clean Waters Act of 1972.

John R. Quarles, in a speech here before the Water Pollution Control Federation, which is in large part an industry organization, said that, if Congress adopted these recommendations, the door would be opened to a wholesale effort to undermine the law's requirements and a long delay in the achievement of its goals.

The near-term goal is the application of the "best practicable control technology" by industry and the achievement of secondary treatment by municipal sewage plants by July 1, 1977.

The long-term goal is the realization of "fishable-swimmable" quality for the country's lakes and rivers by July 1983 through the employment of the "best available technology economically achievable" by each industrial category.

Congress established the National Water Quality Commission in the 1972 act to determine whether, on the basis of experience, "mid-course corrections" should be recommended for these goals.

The commission is composed of five public members appointed by the President and five members each from the Senate and House Public Works Committees. The chairman is Vice President Rockefeller.

At the conclusion of a $17 million staff report, the commission recommended last month that the 1977 deadline for industrial and municipal polluters be relaxed on a case-by-case basis where the discharger "can demonstrate reasonable progress toward compliance."

Furthermore, the commission proposed that the 1977 requirement be waived altogether where the "adverse environmental impact" of such an exemption "will be minimal or nonexistent," or that the costs of compliance will be disproportionate to environmental benefits.

Mr. Quarles said that the extension of the 1977 deadline "would be totally unfair to the majority of companies which have made a good faith effort" to meet that deadline. Further, he said that the proposed total waiver of the deadline in selected cases for cost-benefit reasons would "open a Pandora's box."

"The relief would be a reward to the recalcitrant and a penalty to those who in good faith have complied with the law," Mr. Quarles said.

The very prospect of such change in the law, he argued, would "encourage virtually every discharger to hire economic consultants to prepare a study showing that the cost of meeting the 1977 standards exceeds the benefits for his particular facility."

What Mr. Quarles did not mention, however, is that the E.P.A. has already opened just this Pandora's box by the precedent it set last month when it exempted eight steel plants in Ohio's Mahoning Valley from meeting the 1977 standards of best practicable technology because of the cost of facilities that were economically marginal.

The commission also recommended that the 1983 "fishable-swimmable" goal be delayed for five to 10 years, and possibly be abandoned altogether, because the environmental benefits to be achieved above the 1977 standards would be minimal compared with the heavy costs.

At the same time, the commission recommended that controls on toxic industrial effluents be accelerated by the E.P.A. and be enforced not later than October 1980.

"I find these recommendations mutually inconsistent, undesirable and hopelessly impractical," Mr. Quarles said.

Court Backs Forced Land Sales On Farms Irrigated by U.S. Aid

By LES LEDBETTER

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, April 6—The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed a lower Federal court finding here today and ruled that farmers receiving irrigation water through Federal flood control projects are bound by a land reform law of 1902 that compels landowners to sell off "excess lands" above 160 acres in exchange for Federal irrigation.

The ruling was hailed by land reform experts who are seeking in this and two other cases before this Court of Appeals to break up large land holdings irrigated by Federal water and force their sale to small farmers who will live on or near the land.

"The Court of Appeals has reaffirmed the long-standing national policy that the purpose of the [1902] law is to create small family farms," said Arthur Brunwasser, a San Francisco lawyer who filed a friend-of-the-court brief with the Federal Government in this case. He represents plaintiffs in the other cases.

Ogden Rockwell, attorney for the defendant, the Tulare Lake Canal Company, said that, "because of the decision" and the issue of the "credibility" of Federal representatives who originally said the 1902 law did not apply, he would recommend to his client that it petition the Court of Appeals for a rehearing by "all 12 or 13 active judges" or for a hearing by the United States Supreme Court.

Exemption Defended In the Federal Government's original suit against it, the canal company successfully argued that the large landowners it served were specifically exempt from the 160-acre limitation of the National Reclamation Act of 1902. This is so, the company argued, because the Fine Flat Dam controlling their irrigation water was built by the Army Corps of Engineers under the Federal Flood Control Act of 1944 and because the canal company had repaid its share of construction cost allotted to irrigation before the landowners began receiving the benefits.

On both issues, the Court of Appeals disagreed with the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California. "There is no 'exemption by express enactment' of the Kings River project from acreage limitations in the 1944 Act or any other statute," the appeals court said in the decision written by Judge James R. Browning and concurred in by Judges Ben C. Duniway and J. Clifford Wallace.

Only Implications Noted "The argument for exemption rests instead upon indirect implications drawn from the text of the 1944 Act and scattered incidents in the legislative history," Judge Browning wrote referring to a Supreme Court decision of 1958 in Ivanhoe Irrigation District v. McCracken.

The Supreme Court, wrote Judge Browning, "declines to imply an exception" to the 160-acre limitation, "significantly, where a particular project has been exempted because of its peculiar circumstances, the Congress has always made such an exemption by express enactment."

The Government was opposed by large land owners in the Tulare Lake Basin Water Storage District about 200 miles southeast of here. More than 157,000 of the 188,000 acres within the district are held in tracts of more than 160 acres. The holdings average 2,600 acres each and one tract of 60,000 acres is owned by one company.

LANDOVER, Md., April 6 (UPI)—Truck drivers went on strike against the Washington division of Safeway Stores Inc. today but company officials said stores should be able to operate normally through the end of the week. Pay and other issues are involved.

A Safeway spokesman said members of Local 639 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters went on strike at midnight Monday but that the action was unrelated to the national teamster strike and its settlement. Safeway's 310 drivers and helpers, he said, are covered by a separate contract.

Security Numbers Will Track Runaway Welfare Fathers

ON, April 6 (AP) — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has ordered Social Security numbers to be given to the states for use in tracking missing parents through state records such as motor vehicle registrations.

If a state has exhausted all avenues open to it, the state can ask the department to try to trace the missing parent through Internal Revenue Service, Pentagon or Veterans Administration records. But the Social Security Administration had contended that Federal privacy laws protected the confidentiality of Social Security numbers of about 100 million wage earners and that it was obligated to furnish only the last known address of the missing parent and his employment. After months of arguing against the release, the Social Security Commissioner, James B. Cardwell, reversed his position under heavy pressure. Dr. Mathews issued a memorandum to his subordinates that said he was acting on the basis of legal advice of departmental lawyers and the Justice Department "that the intent of the parent locator service law is for the Social Security numbers to be provided and that that authority is not canceled by the privacy act."

The department estimates that 2.8 million of the 3.4 million families receiving Aid to Families With Dependent Children have absent parents and that about 1.4 million of those parents are financially able to pay for their family's support. When the program is fully implemented nationwide, the department says about $1 billion in child support payments will be collected annually, with a comparable savings to Federal and state taxpayers.

A sign that the impasse had been resolved came yesterday when the Senate voted to confirm the nomination of William Howard Taft IV, great-grandson of President William How-

Jacksonville Unit Withdraws Funds For Rape Victims

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., April 6 — The City of Jacksonville has decided to withdraw financial support from a counseling service and shelter facility for rape victims and battered wives because the building in which it is housed will also be used by lesbian groups and a program to combat discrimination in employment.

The advisory board of the city's Department of Housing and Urban Development voted unanimously today to rescind a grant it approved earlier this year for the Jacksonville Rape Crisis Center. The grant was part of city neighborhood-improvement program funded under the Federal Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

John Van Ness, director of the city department, told the advisory board that the staff understood initially that the center would be used for activities "related directly" to the counseling of rape victims or the provision of services, including temporary shelter, for rape victims and battered or abused wives and children. Later, he said, in a publication of the Jacksonville Women's Movement, the staff learned that the center will have "a much broader program."

Kissinger Sees End of NATO if Europeans Elect Communists

Senator for a week and that "others" had had copies "for three weeks." Mr. Saffir denied that the Buckley office had distributed copies "to anyone." At a State Department briefing Mr. Sonnenfeldt said today that the summary printed in the Times was "a reasonable though very compressed version of the discussion that took place in London last December." The summary of Mr. Kissinger's remarks had the following to say about the impact of a possible accession to power of Communist parties in Italy and France within the European North Atlantic Treaty Organization: "It is difficult to see how we could continue to have NATO discussions if these various Communist parties did achieve control of Western European governments. We would, as with China, perhaps have parallel policies. But the alliance as it now is could not survive."

"The Western alliance has always had an importance beyond military security. The United States would be alone and isolated in a world in which we had no relations by values to other countries." A little later, the summary said that if Communist parties came to power in Western Europe, "there would be a shocking change in the established patterns of American policy."

The summary continued: "It could result in a situation where the United States would be an island in its own values and thereby forced to manipulate various Communist centers of power against each other. The United States could probably survive this situation, but only through the use of a ruthless balance of power policy. If we were to do this we would have lost the moral foundation we have operated on for our entire history."

Mr. Kissinger has aired similar thoughts in public, most recently in Boston on March 11, but never in such tough language. The premise on which Mr. Kissinger based his remarks, as did Mr. Sonnenfeldt regarding Eastern Europe, was "the emergence of the Soviet Union as a superpower," according to the summaries.

Explaining his views on American policy toward Eastern Europe today, Mr. Sonnenfeldt said it had been his intention in London to project concepts that encouraged "independence, autonomy" and a "normal evolution" among the countries of that region.

He said he regretted using the word "organic" to describe the relationship between Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union that the United States should seek to foster, because of misunderstanding it has generated.

In a separate statement Mr. Kissinger said American policy toward Eastern Europe was as brief, that "the President's policy on Eastern Europe was clearly stated in Milwaukee on Friday." In Milwaukee, Mr. Ford said that United States policy is "to support the aspirations for freedom and national independence of the peoples of Eastern Europe."

In the summary of Mr. Kissinger's remarks in London, he recalled that in the mid-1950's it was argued by some American policymakers, presumably Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, that the "strategic balance provides increasing opportunities for regional pressure." This was "wrong then," and "is true now," the summary said.

As a result "regional balances gain more significance," the summary continued.

The implication for his thinking, the summary said, was "a United States policy which would make it impossible even for those Western European parties which are anti-NATO to describe the United States connection as a threat to peace.

This was behind "efforts at conciliation," as during the United Nations special session with regard to developing countries last year.

Mr. Kissinger then blamed contests over policy within the United States for many of the foreign developments that he termed undesirable. The summary continues: "A great deal of what has gone wrong is not the result of détente or Soviet policy. Examples are Portugal and Italy. The problems of Greece, Turkey and Cyprus are in part a result of domestic paralysis in the U.S."

EUROPE BLOC TO AID 3 NATIONS IN AFRICA

Special to The New York Times

LUXEMBOURG, April 6—The foreign ministers of the European Common Market decided at a meeting here today to give $27.5 million in community funds to Zaire, Zambia and Malawi to help cover losses caused by the Angolan civil war.

The move was part of a European aid program for southern Africa that the group hopes will strengthen troubled economies and help stave off the rise of Communist influence there.

The nine member countries have already given a total of over $100 million on their own to the three countries and Mozambique, which has sustained economic losses through its blockade of white-ruled Rhodesia.

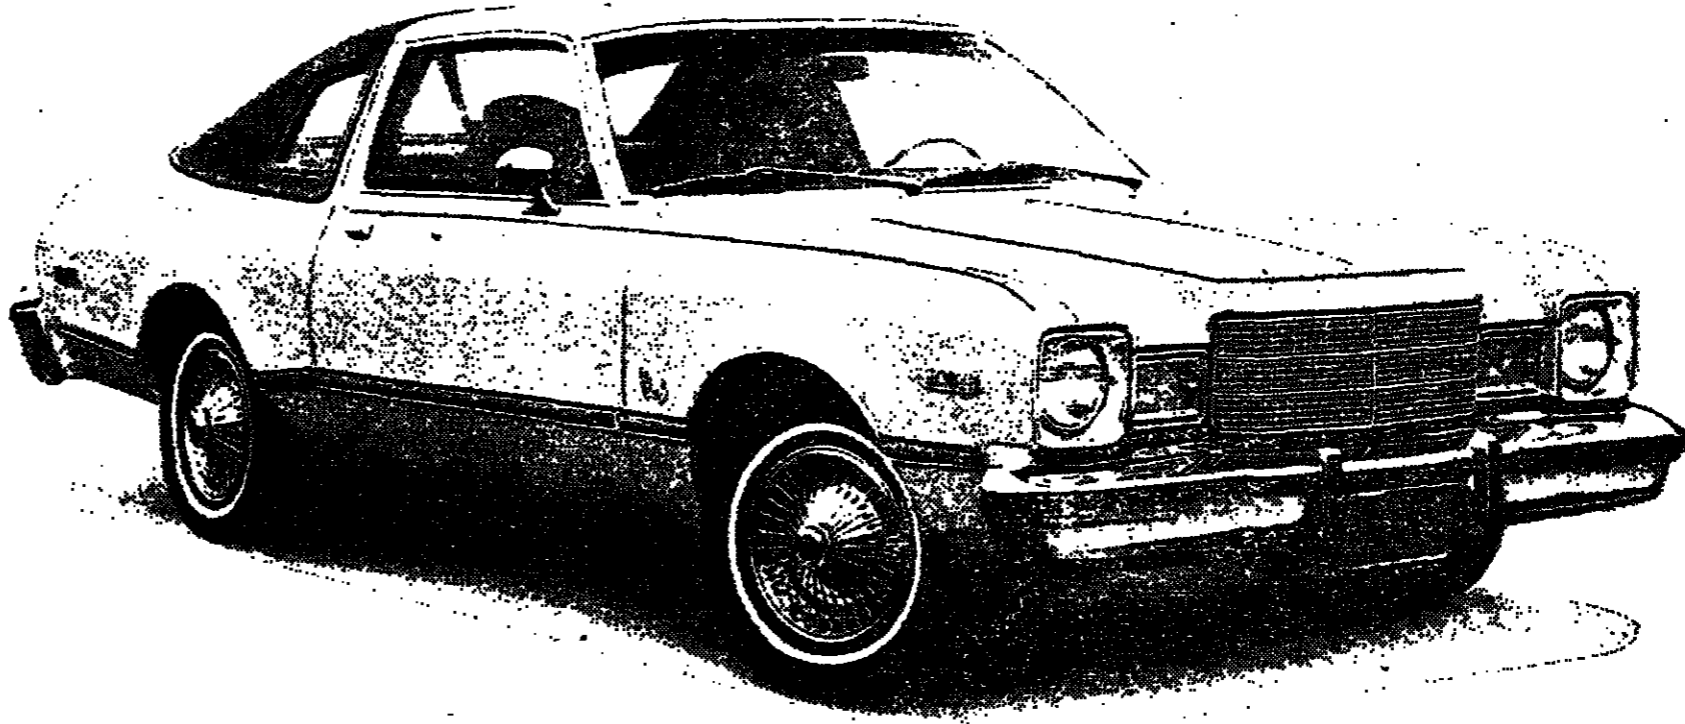

Nomination Approved

WASHINGTON, April 6 (UPI)—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved today the nomination of Charles W. Robinson as Deputy Secretary of State, the No. 2 post at the State Department.

Mr. Robinson, a native of California, would succeed Robert Ingersoll, who resigned effective April 1.

Some members of the Group have also offered to help the new government in Angola but have not yet received a response.

When they recognized the new Angolan Government in February, the group made a strong political declaration promising economic aid to those affected by the war and condemning intervention by outside military forces in the area, an allusion to the Cuban troops that fought on the victorious side in Angola.

Udall and Carter Vie in the Wisconsin Primary; Ford Defeats Reagan Easily

Wallace and Jackson Lag in Presidential Contest

From Page 1, Col. 2. week, limiting his campaign to television appearances and radio commercials.

Mr. Udall campaigned longer and harder here than anyone else, spent more money doing it, and needed the most to win here to keep his chances alive.

He based his hopes on getting a very large vote in Madison, the liberal stronghold, and among the upstate dairy farmers to offset the more conservative vote in Milwaukee and the southern industrial cities, of which Mr. Carter had hoped to get the largest share.

Wallace Campaign Governor Wallace, a solid second-place winner in Wisconsin's 1972 primary, spent more than two weeks flying about the state. This year he abandoned his familiar country music and rhetorical rallies, confining himself to less emotional airport news conferences.

Senator Jackson, whose main hope was pinned on winning decisively in New York, campaigned only three days in Wisconsin, leaving the rest of the drive to his supporters among the state's many large unions.

Reagan, Campaigning in Texas, Backs Return of the Oil-Depletion Allowance

By JON NORDHEIMER Special to The New York Times ABILENE, Tex., April 6 — Ronald Reagan, touring the cities of the flat North Texas countryside today and his free-market philosophy found favor with Republicans in a region dependent on the petroleum industry.

He said the oil-depletion allowance was a "sound principle" and he indicated he would favor returning it to the level it had been before Congress eliminated it for large companies and reduced it for smaller companies.

He also advocated repeal of the energy law and said that the oil industry should be allowed to operate in a free market without government interference.

Finally, he attacked the power of the leadership of organized labor and said he would support legislation giving union rank-and-file members the right to a secret ballot inside the union hall.

VOTERS IN 2 STATES INTERVIEWED IN POLL

The New York Times and CBS News polled voters yesterday in both Wisconsin and New York as they left the polls.

In Wisconsin, 1,744 voters were interviewed, 976 Democrats and 768 Republicans. In New York, about 950 Democrats were interviewed. There was no polling among New York Republicans because of the paucity of voters in that party.

One possible source of error in a survey such as this is sampling error. One can say with 95 percent certainty that results based upon the entire sample differ by no more than 4 points, in either direction, from what would have been obtained by interviewing all voters in both states.

However, as in any survey of public opinion, this margin of error is undoubtedly somewhat larger because of unavoidable imperfections in the way the survey was constructed, and because some voters refused to be interviewed.

Assisting The Times in its 1976 election survey coverage is Prof. Gary R. Orren of the government department at Harvard University.

76 Traffic Deaths Up 1% CHICAGO, April 6 (UPI)—Traffic deaths in the nation increased 1 percent in the first two months of 1976 as against the same period last year, the National Safety Council reported today.

Asked About Union Tactics His references to organized labor came at the same session when a student in the audience of 1,500 people asked his opinion about the "bribery" tactics of labor unions.

"I believe the hierarchy of organize labor is totally out of step with the hopes and aspirations of the rank-and-file members," Mr. Reagan responded to the applause of the audience.

"This has been indicated recently in a national poll when more than two-thirds of organized labor, the rank and file, believe it or not, endorsed the concept of the right-to-work law, and two-thirds said their leaders had too much power, that they should not be using that power or union resources for political ends."

"I believe that nothing in union affairs should become a matter of official union policy until it has been submitted to the membership for a secret vote."

"They should not have to vote by standing up in the union hall and exposing themselves to leadership which literally has a life-and-death threat over their ability to make a living," he said.

Says Areas Have Right to 'Ethnic Purity'

From Page 1, Col. 2. the best interest of the community. It creates disharmony. It creates hatred."

Mr. Carter showed puzzlement and annoyance when reporters pressed their questions this afternoon. "If you're trying to make something out of nothing," he said to one reporter, "I'm not trying to say I want to maintain with any kind of government interference the ethnic purity of neighborhoods. I didn't say that at all. What I say is the government ought not take as a major purpose the intrusion of alien groups into a neighborhood, simply to establish that intrusion."

He said this afternoon that his first comment this morning had got and merited little attention. "None of you noticed it," he said. "There was nothing notable about it. Now in retrospect, you're trying to make something out of it, and there's nothing to be made of it."

Today, as he frequently does, Mr. Carter explained his racial goal in the context of his native South. Often he has said that the Federal civil rights legislation of the 1950's was "the greatest thing that ever happened to the South in my lifetime."

He is the richest citizen in his rural hometown, Plains, Ga., and, as he said today, an integrated public housing project stands "almost within a stone's throw of where I live."

As Governor of Georgia, he sponsored the state's first open-housing law, he said, and enforced it more vigorously than the Nixon Administration was enforcing Federal laws against discrimination in housing.

Asked this afternoon whether the rural South was an appropriate model for racial integration in a traditionally but not legally separate communities in the urban North, he hesitated.

"If you refuse to let me use experience that I've had it constrains me a great deal in my ability to answer your question. I'm not sure it is different," he added, speaking of the Northern and Southern experiences. "In Atlanta, for instance, there was adamant opposition to the intrusion of blacks into those all-white neighborhoods."

Asked further if the South could have been integrated without an aggressive Federal policy, he said, "I see no relationship from your questions to what we've been discussing. I'm not trying to keep blacks and whites apart."

Finally, he was asked whether the preservation of ethnic and economically uniform neighborhoods would not extend racial separation in the public schools of the North. "That may or may not be the case," he replied. "The neighborhoods in Atlanta with which I am familiar have been fairly pure, although they've been much more integrated than I passed my open-housing bill. But the schools are quite thoroughly mixed."

About New York Seeing the Faithful to the Polls

By TOM BUCKLEY

Margaret Conlin was gazing out the window of her second-floor tenement apartment yesterday morning, elbows on the sill, palms cupped under her chin, watching life pass by on West 48th Street, when Jimmy McManus and Joe Magglio drove up.

As Mr. McManus got out of the car, Mrs. Conlin shouted: "Now don't bother coming up. I'll be right down. I've been waiting for you."

A few moments later she appeared, a white crocheted cap on her brightly dyed red hair, wearing a shapeless old black coat and bedroom slippers on her feet. Mr. McManus took her arm as she shuffled across the sidewalk and then helped her into the car.

"You never call me, Margaret," he said, chiding her. "Your trouble is you're too independent."

"Well, I'm getting along all right for someone who had her 80th birthday yesterday," she replied, "but, God knows, it's lonely. I find myself talking to the walls."

Mr. McManus is the Democratic leader of Part A of the 67th Assembly District, the third generation of his family to hold that office in Hell's Kitchen since 1908. Mr. Magglio is the president of the Eugene E. McManus Democratic Club, which is named for Mr. McManus's late father.

"They had come by, as they do every year, to take Mrs. Conlin, whose joints are badly stiffened by arthritis, to Public School 17, a couple of blocks away, to cast her vote in the Democratic primary."

"Margaret is one of our oldest and most faithful voters," Mr. McManus explained for the benefit of a friend who was tagging along with him.

"Oh, yes, she said, a smile brightening her face. "I've lived all my life around here. You know, Jimmy, I was born over on West 45th Street, number 535. I think it was."

Mrs. Conlin was entering the polling place when another woman, who was leaving, embraced her.

"Margaret, how are you?" she said.

"As well as can be expected," Mrs. Conlin replied with a shrug.

The woman turned to Mr. McManus and Mr. Magglio. "Margaret is a wonderful wonderful woman," she said. "I want you to know that Years ago, when we were both working at Madison Square Garden, she was so wonderful to me."

When the woman had gone, Mr. McManus asked, "What was that about, Margaret?"

Mrs. Conlin looked embarrassed. "We were cleaning women, and my husband, God rest him, was a door man," she said. "That poor soul, Rose, I think her name is, was up against it. She didn't have any money. I'd bring her to my house for sandwich and a cup of tea."

While Mrs. Conlin cast her ballot, beyond a shadow of a doubt for the Udall delegates, whom Mr. McManus backed for tactical rather than ideological reasons, she chatted with the poll watchers and inspectors.

The balloting was light, the inspectors reported, and Mr. McManus said he wasn't surprised.

"We've got 16,000 registered Democrats," he went on. "We'll get maybe 4,000 to vote. One thing I notice this year is that nobody cares. That's good for us in ways. We have control of the vote. The phone has been ringing all day at the club. 'Who do you like?' they ask. 'Who do you want us to vote for?' There's support for Carter and Jackson, but it's soft. There's no commitment like there was for McGovern."

From P.S. 17 Mr. McManus and Mr. Magglio drove down to St. Michael's School on West 24th Street, and from there to Holy Cross School on West 42d Street.

"It's getting harder and harder to find polling places," said Mr. McManus. "The city still only pays $25 for each election district. That used to mean something 25 years ago, especially if you had three or four of them. Now they figure that with the light and the heat and the extra heat they're losing money on the deal. Sacred Heart has thrown us out altogether. At every place he stopped, passers-by wrung his hands. More often than not he greeted them by name. Mr. McManus, who is 41 year old, a bachelor and an administrator in the Board of Elections, has made the Democrats of his district into a kind of extended family. Back on 48th Street he passed the time of day with Pierre Pujol, the patron of Pierre at Tunnel. At the corner of Eighth Avenue he picked up a pair of shoes he had left with Jeff Palmer polishing. By 10:45 last night, Mr. McManus's watchers had phoned in the tallies from his 24 election districts. He expected the Udall slate to be far in front, with 1,257 votes. The Carter slate was neck-and-neck with Jackson, with 249, Harris, with 7, and the uncommitted slate, 61.

How many Udall voters, it was asked, had he pulled to the polls. "All of them," Jimmy McManus replied immediately. "There was no interest at all."

83 Pennies in a Box

A big electronics corporation in Connecticut gave $15,000 to the theater anonymously. Another corporation gave $10,000.

But the vast majority of donations were under $25, many of them a dollar, including 89 pennies in a box donated by pupils from Birdseye Elementary School in Stratford.

Just to get its productions on the stage, a theater official said, the theater has to work on a budget of $1.75 million.

But to cover its operating deficit and meet other cash needs, the theater must still raise $285,000, Mr. Matthaet said. It needs $285,000 to meet the payments it should have made last year in a five-year drive to match a $875,000 grant from the Ford Foundation.

the greatest Bergman

"FACE TO FACE" IS ANOTHER TOUR DE FORCE FOR MISS ULLMANN, WHO IS NOTHING SHORT OF IMMENSE. I know of no other actress today who has at hand the reserves that enable her to move so effortlessly through such multiple levels of mood and feeling. But then nobody today except Mr. Bergman writes such roles for actresses. With 'Cries and Whispers' and 'Scenes from a Marriage,' Mr. Bergman's newest film forms a trilogy quite distinct from his earlier though equally fascinating films. In these last three works, Mr. Bergman is more mysterious, more haunting, more contradictory than ever, though the style of the films has never been more precise, clear, level-headed.

—Vincent Canby, New York Times

"A SUPREME FILMMAKER IN TOTAL CONTROL OF HIS MEDIUM! Bergman's technique is now capable of rendering the most painfully intimate agonies, the most elusive glimmers of unease, the slightest changes in the outer or inner atmosphere, even the sound of grass growing. Seldom has an actor been called upon to perform so awesome a set of self-revelations, to cut through to that inner nakedness that is no longer beautiful—mere animality at bay—and executed it so simply, so utterly without self-indulgence or pleas for audience sympathy, with such harsh truthfulness as Liv Ullmann. IT MAY BE THE MOST HARROWING PORTRAYAL EVER OF A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN. IT IS NOT JUST SUBLIME ACTING: IT IS A PIECE OF GREAT, INVALUABLE DARING!"

—John Simon, New York Magazine

"SURELY ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT MOVIES OF OUR TIME! A MIND BLOWING EXPERIENCE FROM BEGINNING TO END! EXTRAORDINARY! Made by a director and star who have already established a record of achievement that all directors and actresses must now aspire to. 'Face to Face' is not only their most devastating but their most moving, their most profound, and their best. WHEN BERGMAN IS DIRECTING MISS ULLMANN, NO ACTRESS ALIVE CAN TOUCH HER."

—Bernard Drew, Gannett Syndicates

"LIV ULLMANN'S PERFORMANCE IS SHATTERING!"

—Jack Kroll, Newsweek

"THE MOVIE BELONGS TO LIV ULLMANN! SHE HAS NEVER BEEN BETTER! AN INTELLIGENT, DEVASTATING PERFORMANCE!"

—Jay Cocks, Time Magazine

"MAGNIFICENT!"

—Penelope Giffitt, The New Yorker

"ONE OF INGMAR BERGMAN'S FINEST FILMS! BERGMAN IS AT PEAK PERFORMANCE. A harrowing plunge into memory—Liv Ullmann communicates every shudder and nerve-twist in a brilliant aria of agony. TO BE 'ENTERTAINED' IS TO BE ENTHRALLED BY LIV ULLMANN, WHOSE PORTRAIT OF THE PROTAGONIST ASSURES HER STATUS AS ONE OF THE GREAT ACTRESSES OF OUR DAY!"

—Judith Crist, Saturday Review

"A MASTERFUL TEAM, THE COMBINATION IS ELECTRIFYING. Ullmann surpasses even her past superb acting with a deeply felt, shattering, virtuoso performance that deserves all available awards. The picture may gnaw at your thoughts and emotion long after you leave the theatre. Once more Bergman explores complicated territory and towers above others!"

—William Wolf, Cue Magazine

"MAGNIFICENT! AN OVERWHELMING EXPERIENCE! IMMENSE IMPACT! Bergman's tendency to present us with desperate characters in desperate situations makes his films the haunting experiences they so frequently are. Just as Bergman with his extraordinary insight extends our awareness of our own possibilities, so too does he in his startling artistic genius extend the possibilities of his medium. LIV ULLMANN IN A PERFORMANCE THAT IS, IN A WORD, SUBLIME. And though 'Face to Face' is clearly Liv Ullmann's film, dependent for much of its power on her gifts alone, she is supported by performances which if smaller and less demanding are still of equivalent perfection!"

—Joy Gould Boyum, Wall St. Journal

"IT WOULD BE HARD TO CONCEIVE OF A MORE MAGNIFICENTLY DIRECTED AND ACTED MOTION PICTURE THAN 'FACE TO FACE'. LIV ULLMANN'S PERFORMANCE IS UNPARALLELED—THE FINEST PERFORMANCE I HAVE EVER SEEN A WOMAN GIVE ON THE SCREEN, AND WORTHY OF EVERY AWARD EVER THOUGHT OF. Ingmar Bergman has written a powerful, perfectly balanced screenplay and directed it with a brand of unflinching honesty and loving compassion that is seldom encountered. It is impossible to over-stress the amazing level of excellence of the entire distinguished cast of this memorable movie. An excruciatingly emotional and forthright film that cannot fail to leave its stamp of truth, despair, and hope on the hearts of all who see it—AND ALL SHOULD SEE IT! MEMORABLE!"

Stage: 'Last Christians'

A Broad, Flat Cartoon by Jack Gilhooley

By MEL GUSSOW Theaters, art galleries and restaurants are proliferating in SoHo. Wooster Street, for example, once a dim, forbidding outpost of warehouses between Houston and Canal Streets, is now a lively street and a subject of cultural interest. At the south end, there is a cluster of theaters—the Performing Garage, Flama Gail's dinner-theater and the Open Space.

On a recent evening the street outside the Open Space was closed to traffic and the scene of a public art event—a light show being recorded on television tape. Inside, the Open Space proved to be spacious and industrious.

The current play at this six-year-old Off Off Broadway theater (four years in SoHo) is Jack Gilhooley's "The Last Christians." This is one of a number of Gilhooley plays that either have been performed or are scheduled to be performed at various theaters in New York (two of his works have been optioned by the New York Shakespeare Festival).

The Christians of the title are a traveling troupe of Passion players, a shabby, disreputable band on tour of the American provinces. Breezing into a backwater town, they are led by two advance men, who banter and play the fools. They wait for something to happen. In case we do not get the underlined message, they unwisely compare themselves to "those two in that play."

"The Last Christians" is certainly no "Waiting for Godot." Neither is it "The Magic Christian." Terry Southern is much funnier. This is, rather, a broad, flat cartoon that borrows freely and stoops to everything, including a custard pie, which is splattered on the actor playing Jesus.

The Cast THE LAST CHRISTIANS by Jack Gilhooley. Directed by Clinton Anderson. Set by Bob McAndrew. Costumes by David Goff. Production manager, Ollie Gustafson. Presented by the Open Space. Lyrics: Robert Leland. Music: Philip Lawrence. Mrs. Josephine Cavendish Young. Gail Howard Harrison. Josephine Alexander. Robert Leland. (Josephine) Shoshana B. Domer. Verónica. Barbara Dripman. Judith. Robert Leland. John Herring. Danny (Josephine Mary). Nancy Barber. Aurelia. Lillah McGarvey.

Jokes are made about lascivious preachers, blacks, homosexuals (a high-flying character is advised to "take it easy with the geraniums on the Last Supper table"). Mr. Gilhooley has chosen his characters—one of each kind—according to stereotype.

The only characters that surmount the obstacle of the play are those that are acted with flair, such as John Newton as the bolsterous company director and Lillah McCarthy as a headstrong country girl who joins the ragtag group to play Mary Magdalene. Sweetly she confesses, "I have few wants—fame, adulation," one of the playwright's more amusing lines. The set by Bob McAndrew is a papier-mâché field with a colorful, pastoral backdrop. It looks like circus summer headquarters (bring on the clowns!). In his staging, Clinton Anderson busily tries to inject humor between the lines. But the play is self-defeating. One hopes that "The Last Christians" is not representative of Mr. Gilhooley's work. I found its attempts at comedy labored and obvious.

TAJ MAHAL'S MUSIC A RICH, TASTY BLEND

"Roots music," a listener shouted to Taj Mahal during the singer's second show at the Bottom Line on Monday evening. "Come on, more roots!"

Taj Mahal's music has always been basic and earthy. He first attracted attention as one of the few young black artists to sing rural blues, and more recently he has been exploring his Afro-Caribbean heritage by performing calypso and reggae. For a long time it seemed that he was jumping from style to style without really synthesizing his influences, but now, with the

BELAFONTE CALYPSO DIFFICULT TO RESIST

Harry Belafonte anticipated certain aspects of contemporary popular music some 20 years ago, when his stony versions of folk songs and calypsos were wildly popular. Now folk singing has become something of a national pastime, pop music and jazz are moving to lulling Caribbean rhythms, and Mr. Belafonte is back with his first stage show in two years. Beginning a 30-week tour, he is appearing through this weekend at the Westbury Music Fair.

Mr. Belafonte's delivery hasn't changed much. He sings slower numbers in an affecting, straightforward manner and # kicks up his heels on the spicier Caribbean material. His band, Kilimanjaro, purveys an infectious synthesis of Brazilian and Trinidadian rhythms, with such up-to-date touches as occasional wah-wah guitar and clavinet.

The singer's new material also strives for "now" identification, but unfortunately much of it is grotesquely true and sentimental. This makes for a first act that is by turns bombastic and lugubrious. The company's second vocalist, Rhetta Hughes, livens things up with her Broadway-cum-gospel stylings, but ultimately it is Mr. Belafonte's calypsos that save the day. They may be distant echoes of the real thing, but they are vigorously rhythmic and difficult to resist.

FABULOUS FIELDS

W.C. FIELDS AND ME—At the Criterion 34th Street East and Baronet, Rod Steiger gives the performance of his life as W. C. Fields. He has accomplished the impossible. Biographical film portraits are difficult enough, but Fields presents a special problem. Making up an actor to look like Fields and finding someone who can talk with Fieldsian irascibility are only the surface challenges. For the picture to have impact the sadness and loneliness of Fields must also come through convincingly. It can make the difference between caricature and character.

Steiger strikes all of the right nuances. He is accurate, funny, and above all, touching. The film itself, spanning Fields' vaudeville days and early 1930s Hollywood experiences, is crafted entertainingly and with intelligence. There are contrivances, but in the context of most such biographies, they are forgivable. Director Arthur Hiller endows the Hollywood scene with a sense of amusing authenticity.

The narrative echoes the viewpoint of Carlotta Monti, Fields' mistress, on whose book the film is based. Valerie Perrine plays the role sympathetically and attractively. Whatever the objective dynamics of their relationship, the story works well as drama. Fields is etched as difficult, even cruel, with a nagging sense of insecurity that generates hostility and self-destructiveness. But his redeeming features, apart from his comic talent, include an underlying honest charm.

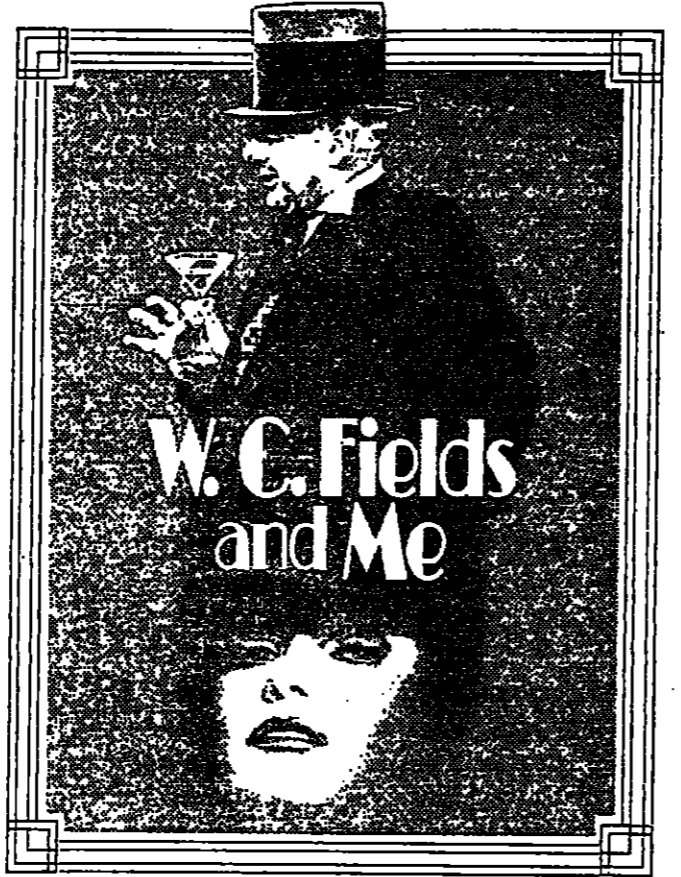

Particularly strong in the surrounding cast is Jack Cassidy, who makes a superb John Barrymore whether drunkenly trying to seduce Carlotta or raising hell with Fields and their cronies. Billy Barry is excellent as Ludwig, the midwit with whom Fields maintains an affectionate friendship.

The funny bits and salty dialogue are delightful and plentiful. Steiger makes the most of these plums, whether throwing out a revenue agent or complaining about babies who suffer from "milk breath." When he spikes a child performer's orange juice with gin, it is worth the price of admission just to see the kid stagger out of his trailer.

On State Aid to Local and City Schools Goes to Trial April 21

HARD BUDER that could have on the historic school financing of State — and Finance to New and other urban April 21 in a court in Mine- which will be Justice Kingsley involves two in an attack, use mounted in on the tradi- of state aid to Critics have that this sys- perpetuates the ferred by school low taxable re- sion challenges formula as it new York City urban school these districts to be prop- erly actually have and needs are not consid- ed formula. all suit was two years ago of Education L.L. and 24 other suburban and rural school districts. The urban issue was raised by officials of the state's four largest cities—New York, Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse—who filed an intervention in announcing this intervention, called the move "the first major urban school finance test in the country."

The New York suit is the latest of many challenges to long-established school-financing practices that have arisen throughout the country since the landmark Serrano case in 1971. In that case, the California Supreme Court ruled that the state's traditional method of school financing was an unconstitutional denial of equal educational opportunity.

But the United States Supreme Court, in a 5-to-4 decision, later held that the United States Constitution did not require equity in this matter. However, the high court's ruling did not stop efforts in many states, including Connecticut and New Jersey.

The complaint of New York State's big cities introduces a relatively new issue to the debate on school financing— that of "municipal overburden."

According to Dr. Bernard R. Gifford, New York City's deputy school chancellor, who has developed much of the data for the complaint, the current state-aid formula is unfair and unjust because it "does not consider the inordinately high public-service expenditures — health care, welfare, mass transportation, public safety as well as education—that urban districts must and do sustain."

Moreover, Dr. Gifford said, the state formula "fails to take into account the extra expense of educating the large number of disadvantaged and handicapped children in the cities." While the educational burdens of the big cities are "by far the greatest in the state," he added, "the levels of state education assistance they receive are among the lowest."

Last fall, the California State Department of Education announced a new policy—the first of its kind in the nation—that will permit 16-and 17-year-olds to leave public high school before reaching the legal age if they can pass a special new test to prove they are literate.

A total of 12,150 students took the new High School Proficiency Exam when it was given for the first time last December, and the results, recently announced, showed that 45 per cent passed the test. An additional total of 19,000 students took the exam last March 17, but the results are not yet known.

The successful students will receive a certificate of proficiency, which is legally equivalent to a high school diploma. They may leave high school immediately if they have their parent's or guardian's permission. All other young people in the state are required to stay in high school until they graduate or turn 18.

A study of the first group of test-takers showed:

- Most of the young people — 85 per cent of the group — had one thing in common: they wanted to leave school.
- Students who indicated they planned to attend a four-year college or university "at some future time" — 51 per cent of those who took the test — had a 52 per cent passing rate, which was higher than the 45 per cent overall success rate.

There was a high correlation between success in passing the exam and the amount of education the head of the student's household had.

In releasing the findings, Dr. Wilson Riles, the state superintendent for public instruction, said that the data of the study should be interpreted cautiously. Because the test was new and the distribution of information about it was uneven, the students who took the first exam were "not necessarily representative of their age group or of those who will take succeeding tests."

One way to beat the high cost of going to college: take Advanced Placement Program courses in high school, according to the College Entrance Examination Board. The program, started in 1955 as a cooperative venture of secondary schools and colleges, makes it possible for qualified students to take college-level courses in high school. Students who perform well on the required examination can earn college credit and possibly advanced placement or standing in college.

The college board cited two examples, one rather extreme, to bolster its contention: a Louisville, Ky., student entered Michigan State University with 53 semester hours of credit in high school — a tuition savings of $5,200. More typically, a student from Watchung Hills Regional High School in New Jersey entered Pennsylvania State University with nine college credits, a savings of more than $700.

The college board cited other advantages to the program: it gives students an opportunity to work at the academic pace and it enriches the school curriculum. As an aid to interested students and their parents, the college board has just published a directory report on the policies of 700 colleges and universities that participate in the Advanced Placement Program and the broader-gauged College-Level Examination Program. The book is obtainable for $3.50 from College Board Publications, Box 2815, Princeton, N.J. 08540.

WEST POINT GETS A CHEATING CASE

finding that he was guilty of finishing an answer on a quiz after the order to stop writing. Lieutenant Pelosi, who is now an officer on active duty in Berlin, graduated in good standing.

Some cadets continue to go to court following expulsion, even though an appeal pursued to the United States Supreme Court by five of the 15 caught cheating in 1973 was eventually rejected.

The cadets argued that they had been deprived of their constitutional rights by being denied legal representation before the cadet honor committee. Federal Court Judge William Knapp dismissed the suit in 1973—and the Supreme Court refused to review it last fall, noting that cadets charged with violations by the honor committee had the right to appeal to a board of officers.

Two years ago Capt. Michael Rose, then an assistant staff judge advocate in the Air Force, charged that legal practices at the nation's service academies violated constitutional guarantees in maintaining conduct, honor and ethics codes.

Captain Rose, who later re-joined the Air Force after a two-year study that he doubted that this view was widely held.

Revocation of the silence in 1973 followed widespread publication of the case of Cadet James Pelosi, who was ostracized for 19 months after he was cleared on appeal following a cadet honor committee's practices.

played well, but we're not "It doesn't matter if you win the game, 11-10, as long as you stop one more shot than the other guy. That's the attitude I took into the second period."

nis Ververgaert, Vancouver's top scorer, had slapped a drop pass from Denis Kearns and rifed it past Gerry Hart, an Island defenseman. Chico ducked and the shot sailed over his right shoulder. Hart and Resch stared at each other incredulously.

The theory, which Hood confirmed yesterday, is that the larger the model the more exact the designer can be in building for speed. Hood will be taking on Stephens in the area of design and then North on the race course.

John Marshall of Stratford, Conn., the Eustach (Sonny) Vynne of Seattle, also associated with the Intrepid effort, will be in the group, Marshall as a member of North's crew and Vynne as the operations manager.

David Pedrick and Andy Macgovern from the San Francisco-based Stephens firm will assist the designer while Du Moulin's aides in fund raising and other support activities are his son Richard, Archibald Cox Jr., and Harmon Hawkins.

Bridge: 30 Games Scheduled Tonight For World Bidding Contest

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

The World Bidding Contest of the International Bridge Academy will be played worldwide tonight. In New York, this unusual event, in which each player has a partner but no opponents and the action proceeds in total silence, will be played at the Temple Shaaray Tefila, 250 East 78th Street at 7:30 P.M.

This is one of 30 games in this Hemisphere, mainly in the United States, but including Canada, Mexico, Bermuda, Barbados, Antigua, Colombia and Brazil.

The diagramed deal from the 1974 contest gave some advantage to those using Two-Way Stayman as opposed to the traditional simple variety. After one no-trump from South and two clubs from North, there was no convenient way to search for a minor-suit slam based on a four-four fit. Many pairs landed in six no-trump, which was distinctly inferior to six diamonds.

South Shows Hearts For those using two-way Stayman, which is a two-diamond response to one no-trump guarantees a game, it was relatively simple. After South showed his heart suit, as shown in the diagram, North could mark time with two no-trump.

This indicated that he had a relatively balanced hand, but had more than one contract in mind. South was encouraged to describe his hand further, and did so with a bid of three diamonds.

North could have raised directly to six diamonds, but this would have been slightly risky. The danger was not so much that two aces might be missing, although that was possible as that the diamond suit might be too weak. Instead he bid four hearts, clearly a cue-bid since a long club suit would have been shown on the previous round.

South showed his spade ace, another cue-bid and encouraging, after which North closed the proceedings with six diamonds.

With the cards as shown, six no-trump would surely fail, although it can be made by double-dummy play of the diamond suit. Six diamonds can be made in various ways in spite of the bad division. South should win the opening spade lead in dummy and aim to ruff at least two hearts in the dummy.

Spade Led to Ace After cashing the heart ace and entering his hand with a spade lead to the ace, he would lead the heart queen. West would give the declarer some help if he covered with the king, or even thought about covering.

But assuming he played low promptly, South would ruff in the dummy, enter his hand with a trump lead and ruff another heart to reach this position:

Diagram of a bridge hand showing card distributions for North, South, West, and East.

The right play at this point would be to draw two rounds of trumps, hoping for an even break in diamonds or clubs. Although East has a trump trick, he has to follow to three rounds of clubs, and the fourth club then assures South a 12th trick. Another play happens to

Truck Mishap Leads State to Demand Safeguards

By MICHAEL KNIGET Special to The New York Times

HARTFORD, April 6—A flat-bed truck carrying 900 gallons of radioactive waste that crashed into a railroad overpass in Middletown last night, but did not spill any radioactive material, left Connecticut today with a state police escort. Officials at Northeast Utilities, a power company that operates three nuclear reactors in the state and is building disposal facility in Morehead, a fourth, put the truck on the road again this afternoon after agreeing to meet two of the three safety demands made last night by Gov. Ella T. Grasso, who failed to clear the overpass involving nuclear materials in the state in little more than a year. It came only weeks after the Brookhaven National Laboratories on Long Island began shipping a series of spent nuclear fuel cells through Connecticut to bypass New York City, which had banned the shipments as a potential health hazard.

Baby Seal Slaughter Seal Protector faces Prison Your Help is Needed

Against all reason, in spite of increasing scientific evidence, that the harp seals are moving toward extinction, (National Geographic, Jan. 1976), in spite of documented evidence of extreme cruelty, in spite of a continuing world-wide outcry against that cruelty, — the harp seal hunt on the Labrador Front is on again. Helpless baby whitecoats are once more being beaten to death to satisfy a high fashion market in luxury fur and leather.

Piloting the IFAW Jet Ranger helicopter, our Director, Brian Davies, was able to reach the hunt, on the remote ice pack off the coast of Labrador, and to take newsmen from the United States, Canada and Europe for a first hand look at the slaughter. Cruelly was seen everywhere. Seal mothers valiantly defended their babies but were driven off by the sealers using knotted rapas and clubs. One female was so badly injured that Brian begged a Canadian Fisheries Officer to put the poor animal out of its misery.

Canadian officials attempted to block the International Fund for Animal Welfare's helicopter and with their aircraft engaged Brian in dangerous aerial maneuvers. Eventually, a force of armed Canadian officials seized the IFAW helicopter and charged Brian with violation of Canadian seal protection regulations. These regulations forbid an aircraft from landing within one-half mile of a seal. Imagine if you can, anything more ludicrous than a law which pretends to protect seals from the disturbance of harmless aircraft while paid killers are beating them to death half a mile away.

For his courageous attempts to help these defenseless mammals, Brian now faces stiff fines and a possible jail sentence — these are the weapons that the Canadian Government uses to punish those who try to protect our wildlife.

Will you join in helping to defend Brian against a grossly unjust charge so that he may continue his untiring battle against the forces of a wealthy sealing industry whose greed extends to the last baby seal. The battle against this industry and its allies in the Canadian Government must now be joined by all who value our wildlife — for it has become a symbol in the fight to preserve what is beautiful in nature and harmless to man.

Progress is being made. Through campaigns led by the IFAW, the commercial harp seal hunt in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence was stopped in 1972 and this year the quota of harp seals to be killed was reduced from 150,000 to 130,000. There is a long way to go but 20,000 baby seals will be alive this year because people like you cared enough to join the fight.

What You Can Do to Help. Please Write in Protest to: The Canadian Ambassador, Hon. Jack Hamilton Warren, 1746 Massachusetts Ave., Washington D.C. 20036.

Please Send a Contribution — to help defend Brian Davies and to enable him to continue his program to save the seals. Your support will make a difference. He cannot succeed alone.

The Jersey Turnpike Rhapsody

NEW MILFORD, N. J. — We've all heard it a hundred times.

"New Jersey—I mean New Joisey," some out-of-state loudmouth will witzicize. "I've been through New Joisey on the Joisey Toinpke. That is with-out a doubt the dirtiest, smelliest, ugliest thing I've ever seen. And they make you pay to ride on it—can you believe it?"

If you are like I used to be, you hem and haw and mumble something about how the whole state isn't like that, and generally try to change the subject. Never again, pal. This Jersey chauvinist is through apologizing for the fact that we're not Disney World.

The time was, of course, that the turnpike was a ride people were only too happy to pay for. After all, the alternative was to drive in second gear on some two-lane blacktop, dodg-ing dusty Ford pickups and eyeing the 25 m.p.h. signs for traces of the county cops who live behind them.

Then dawned the Age of the Inter-state, the Federal Government's gift to the cheapstates. If Kansans would not pay for their own superhighways, then Uncle Sam would match them 90 cents to a dime so they could have them anyway.

The Interstate. Six clean white lanes, a dozen disk jockeys hawking Robert Hall clothes in their identical d.j.-school voices, a thousand Arkansas truckers doing 40 uphill and 90 down, a million cars with the cruismatic locked on 70 — all wrapped up and hermetically sealed by two strips of genuine plastic Interstate-brand trees.

Invisible Again

By Eddie N. Williams

WASHINGTON—Presidential candidates have traditionally appealed to the black community almost exclusively in terms of civil rights issues—when they have felt the need to appeal at all. Thus in bygone elections the candidates who won our favors stood for equal opportunity in education, employment, housing, public accommodations, voting rights, etc.

Since the advent of the 1970's, however, traditional civil rights issues have been given less and less attention. This year the candidates are not even paying lip service to them. One factor that has caused so-called "black" issues to disappear is the widespread perception that many blatant inequities, once sanctioned by law and custom, have been eradicated—at least in the eyes of the law.

Another factor is new Federalism's successful redistribution of money and political power under the guise of improving program administration. But of equal, if not greater, significance is the fact that blacks today are not as militant and aggressive in pursuit of their interests as in the 1960's.

Consequently, blacks are being taken for granted by policymakers and politicians who feel they do not have to grease wheels that don't squeak. Their perception is based not only on the absence of protests and demonstrations but also on low black voter registration and turnout rates and the absence of public complaints.

Such benign neglect is all the more disturbing because not only do blatant inequities still exist, but they are zapping us with problems that are substantially different from those encountered in the 1960's. These problems are more subtle and less susceptible to legislative or judicial remedy—they are far more dangerous to the nation as a whole.

For example, the question today is not whether we can ride on the front of the bus, but whether the bus comes to our communities and whether we have bus fare. The issue is no longer whether blacks have an equal opportunity to get a job but whether there is a job to get. The issue is not whether there are funds for social programs; rather it is how much of the billions of dollars under general revenue-sharing and community-development legislation will ever reach the poor and the powerless.

In the 1960's, we struggled to get equal employment opportunity. Today, Fast. Free. And, oh, so dull. I challenge anyone anywhere on I-95 to look out the window and tell me one thing about the state he is driving through. I challenge anyone riding on 95 to tell me the name of the state he is driving through. New England has its covered bridges and South Carolina its magnolias, but the only place you will ever see them from the road is in the pictures they paste up on the rest areas.

The Jersey Turnpike—well, that is something else again. You may not like what you see, but you know it is New Jersey that you are seeing.

You know it when you pull in and visit one of the Turnpike gift shops. Coffee cups, pennants, shot glasses, ashtrays, tee shirts, calendars, enough junk for a hundred tacky presents—and all of them covered with a map of the Garden State and pictures of Jersey's Big Six (Menlo Park, The Shore, High Point, Princeton, Malverne, and A Jersey Cow).

You know it when you read the names on the rest areas: John Fenwick, Richard Stockton and Molly Pitcher. Sure you never heard of them. But isn't that the mark of an authentic state here?

Vaudeville jokes come to life as you pass the exits for Secaucus, Bayonne, Hoboken, Hackensack and Atlantic City.

From your mobile vantage point, you learn everything about south Jersey that most upstaters ever learn—it has a lot of cows.

North Jersey has to be seen to be believed, and like it or not, you will see it from the Turnpike. Oil refineries, chemical plants, airports, New York on the east, Newark on the west—it may be repulsive, but you are gazing on some of the most valuable real estate in that somewhere.

Drive that same stretch of highway at night, though, and you will treat yourself to a glittering, dazzling light show whose beauty matches that of any natural wonder in America. Some may find a lesson in that, too, but who cares?

We may not be the best-looking state in the union, but our Turnpike proves that we're not afraid to be seen for what we are by whoever might be passing through. Next time some outlandish out-of-stater starts in, we should answer him with all the charm and tact for which we Jerseyans have become justly famous.

An International Business Ethics Code

By C. L. Sulzberger

THE HAGUE—One result of the Arabian nightmare of scandals flowing from United States business malpractices is increasing thought in some nations about the need to draft an international code of good behavior. Signatory nations would be expected to apply this to governmental and private contracts.

There has been so much discussion of alleged U.S. commercial misbehavior in search of competitive deals that many people abroad are eager to see serious consideration of a regulation. The Netherlands exemplifies such views. It is hugely involved in foreign commerce as a nation existing by trade. It has also been politically tarnished by innuendo emerging from Senator Church's inquiry in Washington.

Some rather dubious witnesses summoned before Senator Church's committee have spoken of a "high Dutch official" said to have accepted large payments from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. It was implied that this is probably Prince Bernhard, husband of Dutch Queen Juliana.

Bernhard immediately demanded an official investigation here in order to clear his name. The entire royal family is reportedly determined to ride out the storm, confident of Bernhard's probity. The Queen and her husband even plan to visit the United States this autumn to honor the Bicentennial.

But the smudging of this nation's moral pride and commercial standing by unproved allegations during current inquiries encourages a climate of character assassination unrelated to charges of business misbehavior.

Thus in a quite separate release of a 31-year-old U.S. intelligence report of questionable origin, Bernhard was accused of leaking to Germany secrets concerning the then-impending Arnhem battle although he had a splendid record as commander of all Dutch resistance during World War II.

To avoid publicizing any kind of inferential slander—unless it is proven justified—Europeans are devoting more attention to the overall problem than if it were only a business matter. For it is evident that any damage to the stability of Western nations, tearing down moral reputations, can only benefit their adversaries.

The problems posed by international business competition are immense. It is obviously impossible for a country like the United States to insist that all lands traded with must accept the puritanical standards we now talk of imposing.

A recent visitor to Saudi Arabia, there on a preliminary negotiating trip, was told by a high court official that there would be no point in sending a mission to grease palms and arrange kickbacks. The Italian Communist Party, for example, receives kickbacks on all East-West trade contracts that Italy signs.

One idea now pondered is that a fair practices code should be prepared by an international forum for later presentation to those governments considered likeliest to give the idea serious consideration. As a start, these might include all members of NATO and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (O.E.C.D.).

Such a code could propose a maximum commission rate which signatory nations would pledge themselves and their private companies to observe. Adherence to such a fixed standard, should limit foolish and immoral competition among firms seeking to out-bribe each other in lands where bribery is still an accepted practice.

A good behavior code could be guaranteed internationally and private companies involved might perhaps be insured by participating nations. United States concerns already have their investments in developing regions underwritten by Washington. It is even logical that the World Bank play an active role in such a program and that all governments involved might be asked to make available, as swiftly as possible, any documents they have involving suspected violations.

This is only one approach to a disturbing problem that deeply concerns the trading nations of the West. The latter have seen how present methods of investigating malpractices can get out of hand in a politically dangerous way. They have also discovered to their sorrow that the current global race to peddle arms contains even nastier aspects than hitherto suspected.

One may hope that even before the present series of inquiries has been concluded a start will be made in facing the crux of the matter. This requires creating a self-regulatory system for the great commercial nations, most of which are allied or friendly with the United States.

STRESS TESTS FIND PERSONALITY KEY

Some Thrive on Strain but Others Do Best in Quiet

By BOYCE RENSBERGER

Introverts do better on certain intellectual tasks when relaxed than when under the stress of a tight deadline or when keyed up by even modest levels of caffeine, a recent experiment shows.

Extroverts, on the other hand, do better with the stimulation of some caffeine—the amount in two cups of coffee—and poorly without the stimulant regardless of how little or how much time they have.

Ambiverts, those with personalities intermediate between the two extremes, perform better when under deadline pressure, caffeine making no difference. Their performance declines when they are given all the time they want.

These are the findings of an experiment conducted by a Northwestern University psychologist, who says they fit in with an existing theory that one difference between introverts and extroverts is their response to situations that arouse or stimulate their brains.

Both types, according to this theory, are trying to keep themselves in circumstances in which their mental processes function most comfortably and effectively.

Extroverts, needing a high level of stimulation in their environment, prefer, for example, large, noisy parties to quiet, small gatherings. Introverts, by contrast, find too much stimulation is unpleasantly stressful and keep more to themselves or seek tranquil surroundings.

The experiment, reported in the April 9 issue of the journal Science, was conducted by Dr. William Revelle, assistant professor of psychology at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., and two students, Phyllis Amaral and Susan Turfitt.

The intellectual tasks in the experiment were 60-question tests of verbal ability drawn from the practice tests used with the Graduate Record Examination Aptitude Test, a standard test for graduate students. The questions involved analogies, antonyms and sentence completions.

All the 101 graduate students, taking part in the experiment, were tested under three sets of conditions—unlimited time and no caffeine, a 10-minute time limit and no caffeine, a 10-minute time limit and 200 milligrams of caffeine (roughly equivalent to two cups of coffee).

If you looked at the scores of the group as a whole, you wouldn't see much difference from one condition to another," Dr. Revelle said in a telephone interview. "But, if you separate the scores by personality type, you see that some people are suffering under one condition while others are not."

When the conditions are different, he said, the group that formerly did well declines in performance and the group that did poorly does better. The average score for both groups together does not change appreciably.

Dr. Revelle said that similar results had been found in tests of other mental abilities and that he suspected the phenomenon held true for most of life's intellectual activities, not just in formal tests.

Dr. Revelle emphasized that his findings should not be taken to mean that extroverts should drink coffee before taking an examination.

F.D.A. Urges Curb
On Chloroform Use
After Cancer Study

WASHINGTON, April 6 (UPI)—The Food and Drug Administration proposed today a ban on the use of chloroform in drugs, cosmetics and food packages because of evidence indicating it may cause cancer.

The agency said that chloroform had been used in cough medicines, liniments and a few toothpastes and "as a solvent to make adhesives and resins for food packaging."

The proposal, subject to a period of public comment, would be effective July 8, after which no drug for human beings or cosmetic would be allowed in interstate commerce if it contains chloroform. Food packaging in which chloroform was involved also would be banned effective the same date.

Alexander M. Schmidt, Commissioner of Food and Drugs, said that the ban was being proposed because of new evidence that chloroform caused cancer in test animals. He stressed that there was no evidence humans run the same risk, but said:

"The benefits of chloroform are minimal and do not warrant any risk, however small. The actions we propose today will eliminate any possible risk."

"I encourage drug and cosmetic manufacturers who have not done so already to discontinue using chloroform immediately, even before we complete this required legal procedure."

The agency said its proposal was based on a report it received last month from the National Cancer Institute, which concluded "that chloroform induces liver cancer in mice and renal (kidney) tumors in male rats."

Proxmire Scores Transit Settlement 'Tough Blow' to City Fiscal Hopes

N. TOLCHIN

In the face of more pessimistic evaluations by the General Accounting Office, the Senate Banking Committee, the New York State comptroller and various private groups, Mr. Proxmire said, the city's fiscal hopes were dealt a "tough blow."

Last week's transit settlement, which has to be approved by the Emergency Financial Control Board, would not cost the city any money, city officials have testified. The cost would be made up by savings effected by the Transit Authority, they said.

In the face of more pessimistic evaluations by the General Accounting Office, the Senate Banking Committee, the New York State comptroller and various private groups, Mr. Proxmire said, the city's fiscal hopes were dealt a "tough blow."

The Senator was asked to reconcile Mr. Simon's "cautious optimism" with the pessimism expressed by virtually every other witness who has appeared at New York City oversight hearings. Mr. Simon is required by law to be satisfied that the city's financial plan is on target and that there is a reasonable prospect for repayment, before advancing additional funds from the $2.3 billion in monthly borrowings authorized by law.

A.M. in the brightly lit white marble basement hallway. The employees and two guards were ordered to be calm and were handcuffed to the banister in the stairwell.

The incident took about five minutes, according to James Fitzpatrick, assistant head cashier for the Daily News, who was on his way to work when he saw the guards being robbed. "They told us to line up against the wall and not make any noise," he said.

Betts Bresson, who was on her way to pick up a check in the basement after riding down in the elevator with the two Wells Fargo men, said she saw "the stairway door burst open."

The holdup men took Miss Bresson, Mr. Fitzpatrick and the guards, Peter Ruppert and Arthur Tres into the stairwell. A Daily News guard set off an alarm in the cashier's office immediately after hearing a tap on the stairwell door.

Compromise Is Sought on Stavisky Bill

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times
ALBANY, April 6—Discussions aimed at reaching a compromise on the controversial Stavisky bill have focused on a request that teachers do more work in return for restoration of budget cuts in the New York City school system, one participant in the talks said today.

New York City schools at 21.46 percent of the city's expense budget. The Assembly overrode the Stavisky veto last Wednesday, but Senators Roy M. Goodman, a Manhattan Republican, and Manfred Ohrenstein, a Manhattan Democrat and Senate minority leader, are seeking to come up with a compromise on the matter that would avoid bringing it to a vote in the upper house this week.

The Senate, failed to override the school-formula veto when Mr. Ohrenstein and the Senate Democrats stood by the governor and blocked the necessary two-thirds majority.

Cunningham Still Resisting Subpoena

By TOM GOLDSTEIN
Patrick J. Cunningham, using new grounds, sought yesterday to quash a subpoena directing him to testify about the possible sale of judgeships in the Bronx.

Mr. Cunningham's latest legal challenge came five days after the State Court of Appeals ordered him to appear before the special grand jury and one day after Governor Carey indicated a growing impatience with the effort of Mr. Cunningham—whom he had picked to be the Democratic state chairman—to quash the subpoena.

Mr. Cunningham's action yesterday served to extend further what is considered a routine phase of a grand jury investigation—a determination of the validity of the subpoena.

Carey's Office Weighs Recall Of the Nomination of Schwartz

By LINDA GREENHOUSE
Special to The New York Times
ALBANY, April 6—Governor Carey's office is actively considering withdrawing the nomination of Herman Schwartz as chairman of the Commission of Correction and renominating him as one of the two non-chairman members of the prison watchdog agency.

Mr. Schwartz faces certain defeat when the Republican-controlled Senate votes later this week or next on his nomination as chairman. In the last two months several influential Republicans have said that they could support Mr. Schwartz as a member of the commission, but considered him too poor an administrator to serve as chairman.

Another legislative official close to the negotiations conceded that there had been "no movement" away from the scheduled votes on Mr. Carey's vetoes. But he described the situation as a "dynamic stalemate"—that is, no one is rigidly adhering to a single approach.

Mr. Schwartz himself would not comment on the matter today. Mrs. Wadsworth, an upstate Republican, faces no apparent opposition to her own confirmation. Ironically, if Mr. Schwartz were named to the commission, it is these local officials who have lobbied most strenuously against his confirmation as chairman.

Saint Laurent Was Hailed and Adored; For Kenzo, Tumult and Frenzy

By BERNADINE MORRIS
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, April 6—The first braves of the fall ready-to-wear shows ricocheted from the rafters of the Palais des Congrès this morning. The audience rose to its feet as the wedding party of elegant peasants assembled on the runway and Yves Saint Laurent was hailed as the savior of fashion.

Last night, Kenzo had a tumultuous reception, but it wasn't quite the same thing. Some of the frenzy spilled over from the runway, where the models danced around with feathers stuck in their hair to screaming music in screaming colors. Everybody said they were crushed and exhausted, but uplifted.

This morning it was calmer. The reception was for the clothes, not the histrionics.

Both designers are into folklore, although which folk and which lore is not immediately apparent. With Yma Sumac amplified to unbearable levels and all those feathers, the source at Kenzo's show seemed to be Peru, but then it spread out to other countries, other Indian tribes.

Plenty of Splendor
Saint Laurent's starting point was Russia—before the revolution, of course. Then he spread out to Byzantine and all that splendor.

But he never departed for a minute from his glorified peasant look—after bequeathing man-tailored pin-striped suits to the world, he cut them adrift, without a turn of his head. It's the intensity of his approach that gives his collection such an impact.

Both Kenzo and Saint Laurent have a cruel punishment to inflict on viewers who don't approve of their clothes. They're the most widely copied designers in the world, so if you don't like their peasants or Indians, steel yourself. You're going to see plenty of other incarnations in the coming months.

Among the pretty silent minority who didn't take to Saint Laurent, the main complaint was "too theatrical." So be it. But lively theater it was and this viewer didn't object to a little excitement. They were fun peasants.

Take a look at Millicent Rogers's Schiaparelli-designed peasant blouses and skirts at the Metropolitan Museum's current costume exhibit if you want to check antecedents. Or remember what American designers such as Tina Leser and Carolyn Schnurrer were up to in the nineteen-forties. Or call to mind more recent Saint Laurent peasants. Fashion moves backward as well as forward in time.

Next fall's peasants, according to Saint Laurent, will wear boots and babushkas for starters. Their long, full skirts will be topped with big-sleeved blouses and braided jackets. Sometimes the jackets are sleeveless, but always braided.

Over all this, one ties a big flowered square, or buttons a knitted coat with toggles, or throws an enormous cape, one end flung over a shoulder, and a pointy hood thrown back. Conceivably, one can wear all three at the same time. Sweaters patterned like mosaics are an alternative to the jacket.

There's a single coat, quite peasanty too. It's fitted and it has a lot of braid at the seams.

At night, the same shapes prevail, but they grow fuller. The skirts are hiked up to show petticoats. The blouses are in thinner silks and bolder patterns. There's the gleam of lamé in prints and gold piping takes over from the daytime braid. There's a lot of Lurex and flowers to make everybody sparkle.

Kenzo's Indians wear miniskirts.

A Miniskirt Comeback?

Right, miniskirts. Micro-minis, you might say. Sometimes they're simply heavy sweaters worn over heavy tights and anklets. Sometimes they're little tie-on affairs wrapped at the hips over sweaters. Under them, tights and anklets. Or tights and crew socks. On the feet, heavy crepe-soled oxfords, something like earth shoes. No fancy footwear this season in Paris.

So are miniskirts coming back?

"They're very cute when they're done properly," is the official response of retailers from all parts of the country. Inwardly, they shudder. Just when they've gotten customers used to longer skirts, this should happen to them!

Still, they console themselves that they won't be done properly. The tights, for instance, will never be available in the colors to match the sweaters, they say.

Brilliant Colors

What you wrap the whole outfit up in is a blanket. That's right, a blanket. Indians, you know.

What you dress up in at night, besides feathers, is a pleated skirt that wraps around anything else you might have on. It's in brilliant, carnival-in-Rio colors.

Rio's near Peru, just as Turkey is hard by the Soviet Union—in fashion parlance that is.

The coarse knitted tights turn into panne velvet pants for festive Indians, according to Kenzo. Then you also wear a bright silk tunic, and you go to a party where you meet your friends dressed up as Russian peasants.

Next fall's fashions will be quite a trip, according to the best of the French ready-to-wear houses.

Kenzo's minidress and cardigan with Indian markings is worn with feathers; the skinny pants are tucked into boots.

Yves Saint Laurent's peasant gold lamé dress is worn with a cardigan and a headscarf.

Kenzo's minidress, right, is tied over a striped turtleneck sweater, and comes with a cardigan of the same length. Heavy tights and anklets are extras.

New hopes... old traditions.

Another Passover, another time for joy... with the family gathered 'round the seder table to enjoy the special Passover dishes... the matzo, the gefilte fish, the sweet Passover wine. It's a tradition that's thousands of years old, yet it symbolizes the renewal of hope and a new beginning.

Even nature seems to be joining in the celebration as the trees and flowers start to bud and the first tender blades of grass push their way through the earth. If there's a lovelier, more loving time, I can't imagine what it could be. Everyone in the Waldbaum family joins me in wishing you and your family the happiest of holidays.

CONSUMER NOTES

6 Senators Seek New Labeling Rule

By DIANE HENRY

WASHINGTON, April 6—Procter & Gamble makes both Crest and Gleem, two toothpastes, and six Senators say they want to make sure the public knows that these products, like many others, are not entirely competitive.

This week the Senators asked the Federal Trade Commission to require that advertisements include the names of parent corporations "so people would know which items on the store shelf are actually competing products," said one of the Senators, James Abourezk, Democrat of South Dakota.

The fact is that the only difference between the products is how they are advertised, said Senator Abourezk after offering these additional examples:

Procter & Gamble also makes Joy, Ivory and Thrill dishwashing liquids, as well as Zest, Lava, I-ori, Camay and Safeguard hand soaps. Spic and Span, Mr. Clean and Top Job cleaners are all made by P.&G., as are Tide, Cheer, Gain, Oxydol and Bon detergent.

Johnson Wax makes Kleen and Shine, Favor and Pledge, while Sterling Drug makes Bayer aspirin, Cope, Midol and Vaniquin.

"It is obviously unfair when one corporation is advertising two of its own products as if they were legitimately competing products," said Senator Abourezk, who was joined in the petition by five other Democrats—Thomas McIntyre of New Hampshire, Philip A. Hart of Michigan, Vance Harke of Indiana, William Hathaway of Maine and Floyd Haskell of Colorado.

"People should know that Minute Maid orange juice is made by Coca-Cola, that Madria-Madria sangria is made by Gallo and that Wonder Bread is made by I.T.T.," Mr. Abourezk said in a statement. "This type of knowledge is healthy for the market place. I believe, because consumers can reward a socially responsible company for its positive contributions or avoid the products of a corporation they feel is not acting in the public interest."

American Express Agrees on Applicants

The Federal Trade Commission has settled its case against the American Express Company, which had been charged with violating the fair Credit Reporting Act by failing to inform rejected applicants of the nature of the unfavorable information collected about them.

The issue was resolved last month when the company, in a consent agreement with the F.T.C., promised to adhere to the 1970 act. The consent agreement, which the commission has the power to withdraw following a review of public comments on its action, does not constitute an admission of a violation of the law by American Express, the Government said.

The commission originally issued a complaint against American Express after reviewing files of rejected applicants in 1973.

Consumer Group Rates Congressmen

The Consumer Federation of America, the country's largest consumer organization, recently published a scorecard of every member of Congress on 17 votes taken last year that the federation considered "key issues to consumers."

Senator James L. Buckley, Conservative-Republican of New York, was ranked with three other Senators as a "consumer zero" because they failed to vote for what the federation said were bills in the best interests of consumers on at least 75 percent of the key issues and because they are likely to face tough re-election contests.

Fourteen other Senators and 64 Representatives failed to cast a "single vote in the best interests of consumers," according to the federation, but the "zero" category was reserved for those facing difficult elections "in which consumer votes will be important."

The votes selected by the federation for its scorecard included those on a variety of issues, including variable-rate mortgages, the Beef Research and Information Act, a bill to establish a consumer protection agency, an amendment to the Financial Institutions Act to defer repeal of the section that prohibits banks from offering interest-free checking accounts and an amendment to the "redlining" bill limiting mortgage-lending disclosure, which the federation felt would encourage lenders not to make money available for new housing in inner-city and often racially integrated neighborhoods.

Other votes include those on a number of energy-related measures, such as the oil depletion allowance, oil price decontrol, deregulation of new natural gas prices and divestiture by oil and gas companies of vertically integrated holdings.

Senator Buckley, the only member of the New York delegation to be categorized as "zero" declined to comment on the federation's scorecard.

The only member of the New York delegation included on the federation's list of those who never voted for the consumer was Representative James F. Hastings. York's delegation were Thoin January.

The "heroes" among New York delegation were Thomas J. Downey, Jerome A. Amodeo, Joseph P. Addabbo, Benjamin S. Rosenthal, James Scheuer, Shirley Chisholm, Elizabeth Holtzman and Herman Badillo, all Democrats.

Senator Jacob K. Javits, New York's senior Senator, who was not listed on either the "heroes" or "zeros" list, voted the consumer's interest 63 percent of the time, the federation said.

Bill Would Require More Label Details

Any coloring, ingredient, spice or flavoring in a packaged food product would have to be listed on the label under the provisions of a bill passed by the Senate last month and now awaiting House action.

The bill also would require that labels specify the percentage of the major ingredients.

The Agriculture Department sets standards on how much meat, poultry or fish must be included in certain types of products, but percentages are not required on the labels.

The bill, the comprehensive food safety and labeling bill, would also require full disclosure of ingredients used in standardized foods made under a set Government recipe, such as mayonnaise, ketchup and some salad dressings. A producer now lists only the "extra" ingredients when the standard recipe is not followed.

Senator Warren G. Magnuson, Democrat of Washington, said in the Senate debate before the vote: "Much of this labeling is already done. It makes sense that food processors would want to provide information as to the value, quality and nutrition of the food product and as to the various ingredients which make the food product." But, he added, "what is needed is uniformity in food labeling."

The bill, which would also impose new safety requirements on food processors and increase the Food and Drug Administration's enforcement powers for food safety, was passed in a similar version in 1974. It is now before the same House subcommittee that failed to act on the 1974 bill. Its outlook is unclear.

Wicker Comes Indoors, in an Array of Furniture

By SHAWN G. KENNEDY

Furniture designers have shown that wicker need not be saved for the porch, back yard or summer place. Still, willow, rattan and bamboo pieces are natural for the type of furnishing done in the vacation house or used to summerize a city apartment.

And since wicker is now sold as year-round, any-climate furniture, shoppers will find that suddenly there is a plethora of designs from which to choose.

Along with wicker trunks, rockers, porch swings and armchairs, retailers now carry sofas, étagères, beds, bureaux and living and dining room furniture. And established designers are working in wicker and mixing different types, as well as using it with such standard furniture materials as wood, metal and Formica.

Another bonus is that much of what is being produced now is sturdier. It's now reinforced with wooden or metal interior construction. Even the pieces from the Far East, where most of the wicker furniture is still made, seem to be of higher quality.

But as is to be expected, with these improvements have come higher prices. As one retailer put it "A few years ago it would have been hard to find anything in wicker that went for more than $100. But now the prices of wicker furniture are competitive with that made in traditional materials." Still, there are bargains to be found at several places, including the Wickery (342 Third Avenue, between 25th and 26th Streets) the Wickery Annex (402 East 69th Street) and even a few at Walter's Wicker Wonderland (991 Second Avenue, between 52d and 53d Streets).

The Wickery carries the usual assortment of baskets, trunks, tables, armchairs and hanging-basket chairs. To that collection have been added some things from China, such as a bamboo slat sling chair.

The bamboo slat chair, which is collapsible and adjusts to three sitting levels, has a cinnamon-colored lacquer finish frame, a natural-colored bamboo slat seat and costs $69.95.

Two-Tier Cart Another folding piece, a 26-inch table with a wicker top and a wooden base, sells for $40. A dark rattan-armed chaise longue that looks ready for plump, printed cotton pillows costs $130.

The Wickery has a couple of different wicker top/bar carts. One cart, in varnished rattan, has two glass shelves—one on top of the cart and one on the bottom—and a wicker holder in the middle for liquor bottles. The cart costs $125.

The Wickery Annex, like the Wickery, is a specialty shop and has more in the way of wicker accessories and bric-a-brac than genuine furniture. But the shop does carry several pieces of the white, old-fashioned Victorian wicker, as well as things in what were the latest trend: slat burnt to resemble shell.

A tortoise-looking coffee table with a slat seat sells for $79, a bent armchair in the same costs $39 and a bookcase is $79.

The shop also has assortment of wicker armchairs—wicker combine different weaves and style range in price from $106.

The Wickery Annex tries that most of w the floor is casual. But the owner, Robe keeps on hand a s importers' and rers' catalogues and order furniture for ers, often for 20 pe low the listed price.

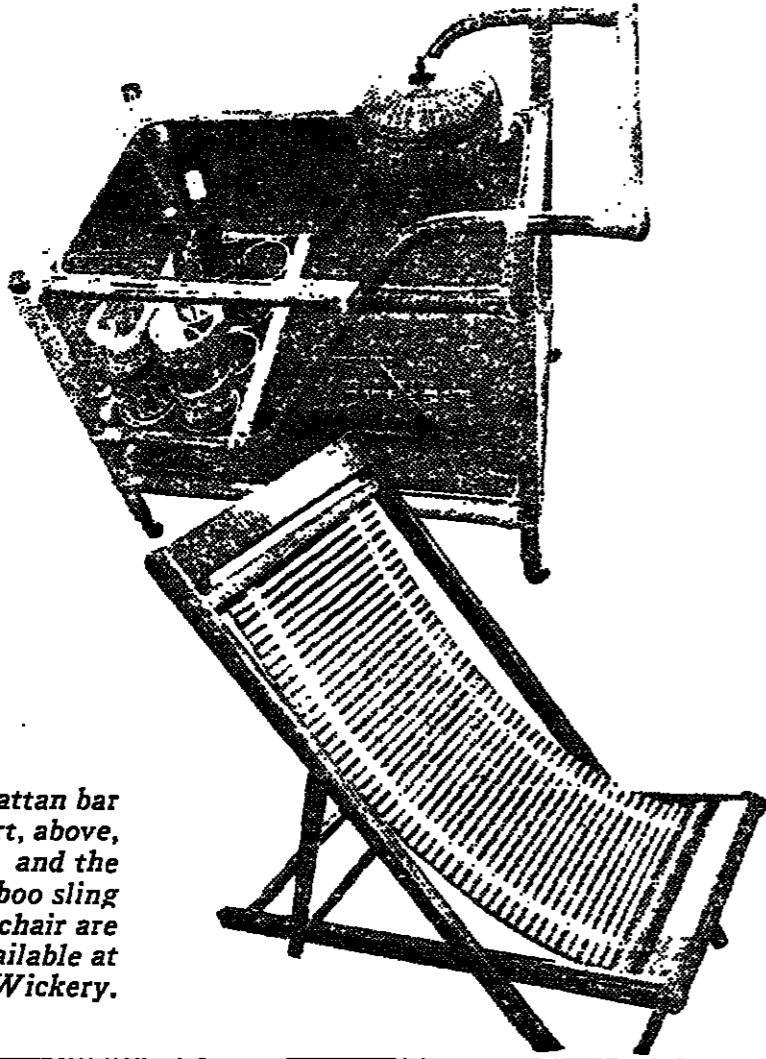

Walter's Wickery land is a furniture s er than a wicker many of the piec store's three level the "back porche" wicker designs ment is reserved summy pieces.

Among the best the newer things is the Italian wic ture. The Italian's up-to-date contemp sign with the cas wicker rattan, w bamboo.

One such piec deep, wicker arm high, straight side for $400.

Rattan bar cart, above, and the bamboo sling chair are available at the Wickery.

nd Legends
 ten's writing is woven blend ination and her throughout her emes that pre- main the same; and her woman- wo are inextric- case," she said. eland" is a semi- cal treatment of Miss O'Brien's early life in Ireland. (She left there in 1960 as a young married woman with two small sons to live in London.)

 The myths and legends of the country are interspersed with Miss O'Brien's memories of people, places, faces, days, the rain, the heroes, mothers, honeybees, the weather and — inevitably — priests and saints.
 "Religion was part and parcel of my interior life. It was a very medieval life. The fear and the reality of the devil were very much alive. The body and blood of Christ were as real to me as the bread on the table or the pig's blood in blood pudding.

 When she was 12 years old she moved to a convent to go to school. "Religion took on more esthetic proportions though the rigors were just as strong," she recollected. "The ordinary trials of a nun weren't enough for me. I wanted to be a saint."
 But life, and the need to learn a trade, had another fate in store for her. For four years she worked in a drugstore for a couple of dollars a week, while she studied at night to qualify as a pharmacist.

 "Then I did what all heroines of 19th-century novels did at 19 or 20," said Miss O'Brien, who is tall, large-boned and slender, and has green eyes. "I eloped, and moved to the dashing, romantic Irish countryside of County Wicklow. I was banished by my family. It was lonely, and there I began to read."

 Although even as a child she had always written, Miss O'Brien said she had not really read much before her marriage. "Just Addison, Charles Lamb, stock catalogues for the farm, prayerbooks, and cookery books," she said.
 The reading paid off. She began to work as a manuscript reader for publishers, and eventually, after she had moved to London, two publishing houses—one American and one English—put up about $80 each and asked her to write a novel. Two and a half weeks later she had written "The Country Girls."
A World of Difference
 Since then Miss O'Brien's work has become a kind of updated Irish folklore. The heroines in her fiction have been portrayed in the movies by such strong actresses as Elizabeth Taylor ("Zee and Co."), Rita Tushingham ("The Girl With Green Eyes") and Claire Bloom ("Three Into Two Won't Go"). But because she writes about passion, love and sex, her books have often been banned in her own country.
 "We never discussed sex when I was a girl—we swore by Irish maidenhood," she said. "Sex was dark and repressed and hidden and concealed. It was on a par with leprosy, hell and terror. Naturally that makes people very sexual."
 Inevitably, it is that world that Miss O'Brien has drawn on heavily in her novels and short stories. "My books belong to another era than the one I live in now," she said, looking around at the oriental rugs, contemporary paintings, Indian embroideries and glass chandeliers that decorate her home.

 That world of her writing is full of forbidden loves, misunderstood passions and secret liaisons. It is marked by the barren lives that such constrictions lead to—particularly for women.
 "I feel a great subterranean anger toward both my personal and my social history," said Miss O'Brien, who describes her family life when she was a child as "barbarian." "There was lots of drinking and a lot of threats. The Catholic religion really is the most primitive in the world. One never gets over it."
 She chose to defy this inheritance publicly—by the subjects she wrote about, by getting a divorce in 1965 and, most of all, by leaving Ireland. "I left in order to separate myself from family, religion, and the land itself—if you like, to grow up."
 Since then she has lived in London, and led a financially independent life, supporting her two sons, who now are university students at York and Cambridge. "I live in England because they have a great respect for privacy here," she said.

Fortunately, some things never change.

The ancient traditions remain, generation after generation. And today, we observe Passover as our forefathers did thousands of years ago.
 For almost a century, the old-fashioned goodness of Manischewitz has ushered in festive holiday dinners in Jewish homes all over America. This year, once again, Manischewitz matzo, gefilte fish, soup and other delectables will grace any traditional table.
 Treat your family and friends to a taste of tradition, too. And have a good Passover!

For traditional goodness you can count on.

Fashion Show's Co-Hostess Was a Year Old

By ANGELA TAYLOR.

Halfway through the party to show off the Betsey Johnson's Kids collection for fall, Lee Friedman struggled through the mob to the designer and said "Betsey, the kids are killing each other."

For a moment, Mr. Friedman, who is president of the company that manufactures the clothes, looked as though he regretted not having settled for a proper fashion show with professional children modeling sedately on a runway. But the 200 guests—mainly store buyers—loved the informality of real children getting into real mischief. The party had some of the joie de vivre that fashion shows used to have in the 1960's and everybody agreed it was fun.

Miss Johnson held the party in her SoHo loft, corralled her friends' offspring (including Mr. Friedman's two young daughters), dressed them in her whimsical designs and let them loose to wander around. They stuck their fingers in the elaborate buffet spread out on a worktable, fought over toys and occasionally socked each other. The clothes held up remarkably well.

Like Her Mother's

The party had a co-hostess: Lulu Johnson, a couple of days short of her first birthday, wore a green jumpsuit exactly like mother's. ("So we can find each other in the crowd," Miss Johnson said.) A cheerful, brown-eyed blonde, Lulu lurched around showing off her walking skills. She grinned at cooing adults, stole ice cubes from their drinks and sometimes took a swipe at some child who was getting too familiar with her toys.

Betsey Johnson, now 33 years old and wearing her hair in a red, Cleopatra style, has been the enfant terrible of designing for a decade. Her adult clothes, first for Paraphernalia and then Alley Cat, have always had an ingenious zaniness that sets her apart and got her a Coty Award in 1971, the same year Halston got his first one.

"Instinctively, I'm a kid's wear designer," she said as she rescued Lulu from under a chair. "When Lee Friedman asked me to design a line, I jumped at the chance. I had Lulu the day after I completed my first collection."

Holds Definite Ideas

"I've always had definite ideas about how I wanted kids to look," she continued. "Now with Lulu, I know the way I want her to look when she's 3, or 7, or 10." Most parents—and certainly all children—would approve the Betsey Johnson designs. Instead of sugar-and-spice pastels, she uses bright, sharp colors, and mixes solids, stripes and plaids with abandon. She bases most outfits on an underlayer of striped T-shirts and tights, and then adds a second layer: a school smock, an apron with a big pocket, pull-on skirts or slacks, or overalls or jumpsuits. The children's favorite seemed to be the jumpsuit with cuffed knicker legs and a big BJK (for Betsey Johnson Kids) on the back.

Everything is cotton and washable. Miss Johnson voiced another practical idea. "Kids' clothes always get to be hand-me-downs when they're outgrown," she explained. "I was a middle kid and I got to wear a lot of hand-me-downs I didn't like. So I wanted to do the kind of clothes kids wouldn't hate if they inherited them."

The clothes, priced from $7 for a T-shirt to $28 for a jumpsuit, should be in stores at the end of June.

Market Basket Drops by 1.4%

By WILL LISSNER

After teetering for weeks with no changes or fractional ones of no significance, the cost of feeding a family of four in New York City dropped 1.4 percent for the week, the City Department of Consumer Affairs announced yesterday.

The department's 38-item market basket cost $70.80, $1.02 cents less than the week before. The current total of average prices for the items was 1 percent higher than twelve months before, when the basket cost $70.09.

The rise in prices over the year was within the normal range for the American economy, indicating that greater stability had come to the retail food market. But price analysts do not believe that the end of price rises is yet in sight.

The Consumer Affairs Commissioner, Elinor C. Guggenheimer, pointed out that the price declines affected certain items in almost every department of the supermarket.

"There were good buys for budget-minded shoppers in almost every market basket category," Mrs. Guggenheimer said. "The best and probably most welcome savings were in the meat case where ample supplies of beef and pork produced significant price reductions."

Chuck steak dropped 9 cents to an average of 87 cents a pound. Marketing specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture reported the current supply of beef was 10 percent larger than the supply 12 months ago.

Marketing Heavy
Explaining the increase, the specialists said that when the price of feed moderated last year farmers brought more cattle into the feed lots for fattening and finishing. As a result, marketing has been heavy and prices to beef producers have dropped since the first of the year.

As of a month ago producers were receiving about $36 per 100 pounds for choice steers, a drop of 88 since early January. The specialists say current prices are below break-even levels, so they anticipate a cutback in marketing.

Because of this, Nathan Herschberg, price analyst of the State Department of Agriculture and Markets, advised consumers to take advantage of widespread special sales.

"The lower prices in the live animal and the wholesale markets are reflected in the sales rather than in the regular prices," Mr. Herschberg said. "But the intensity of competition in sales makes it worthwhile to shop the specials as long as the family has freezer space."

Robert Goldman, chief of the Connecticut Department of Agriculture's marketing division, reported in Hartford that ocean fish were now more reasonably priced there.

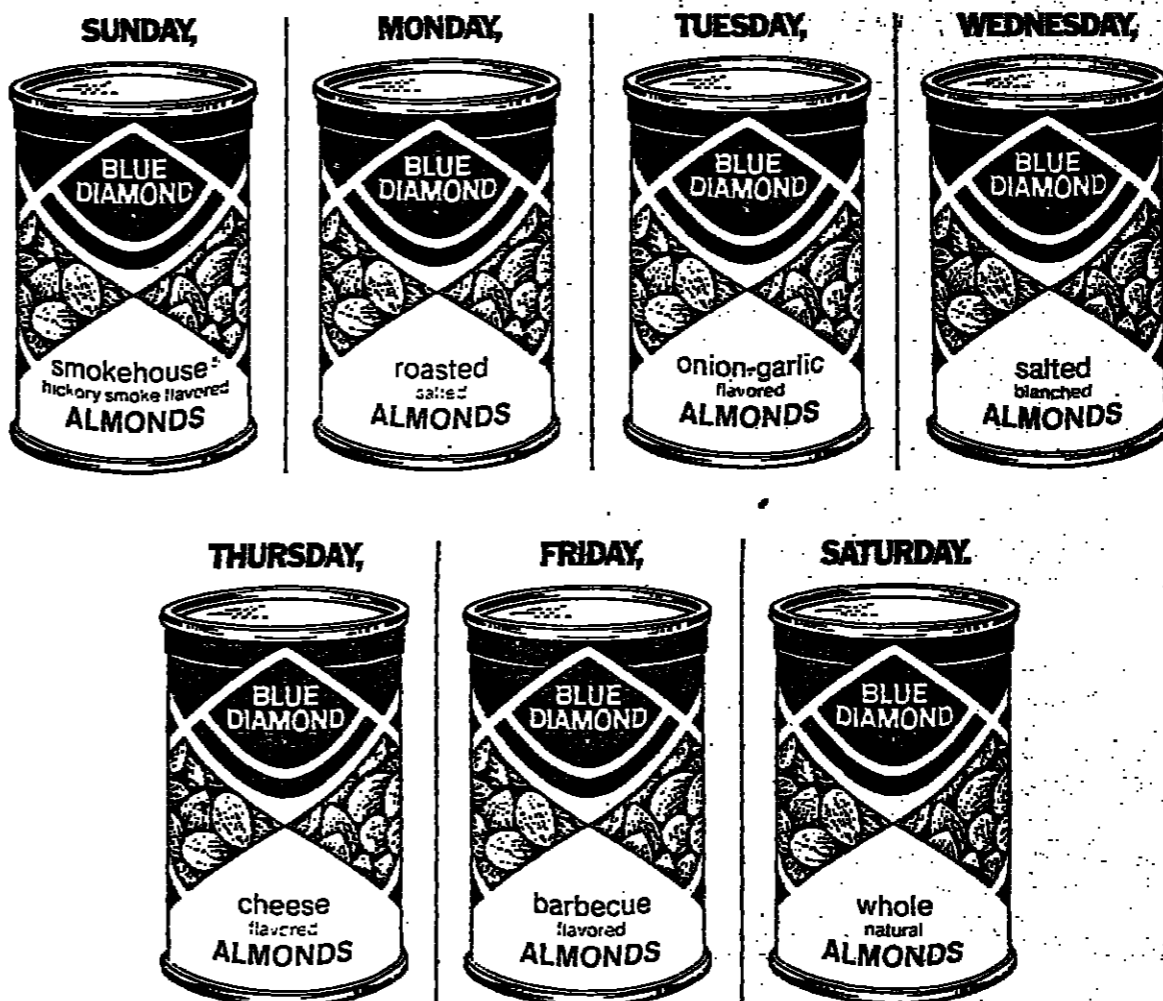

In New York City, potatoes went up a penny to 91 cents for the five-pound bag, reflecting the fact that on March 1 stocks in the eight Eastern states were down 29 percent from 1975.

Tibetans Adapt To the U.S., But Miss Their Lofty Homeland

The Wangdus, left, love New York but they don't want to forget Tibet. The daughters in the Thonden family, right, enjoy going to public school.

The New York Times/Larry Morris and John Solo

floor. "We really love it here and want to stay on," she said. "Whenever we go away from the city and then come back to it, it's like coming home."
Dechen Yudon, who is 27 months old, looked up and smiled. She understands both Tibetan and English and speaks a little of both. She has learned the English alphabet from her blocks.
What has helped with the Tibetans' adjustment to life in the United States is their belief that they and Americans are basically alike.
Thupten Yuthok fled Tibet with the Dalai Lama when he escaped to India and is now a nurse in general surgery at New York Hospital. She said as she poured tea in the apartment that she shares with her mother: "I think that Americans and we Tibetans have certain traits in common. We're both very open, we're both hospitable, industrious, good-natured, and we both have a sense of humor."
Far Apart in Culture
But no two peoples could be more unlike in culture, customs and religion, not to speak of geography. Before the Chinese occupation about one-sixth of the men and boys in Tibet went into monasteries. Polygamy was accepted, although monogamy was far more prevalent. All the Tibetans here are monogamous.
As Buddhists, the Tibetans believe in reincarnation. And because their small Himalayan country, the highest in the world, was isolated for centuries, the people, by Western standards, led a primitive existence.
Yet here they are now, not clinging to one another, but making their separate ways in this sophisticated, crowded and often brutal city. And they are charming New Yorkers with their almost childlike trust, their willingness to do almost any kind of work, their good humor, their courtesy.
Some Americans have aided in the establishing of the Tibet Center on lower Broadway. The Americans have also been moved by the Tibetans' courage in the face of being unable to learn what has happened to members of their families still in Tibet.

As for the fate of their national culture, no one here knows what is going on in their country.
The center, which opened in February, has classes in Tibetan history, art, language, customs and literature, and in Buddhist meditation. Forty Americans enrolled when the classes were announced.
Also a Cultural Institute is being established.
Philip Glass, a composer of experimental music, is going to give another benefit for the center, after he and Robert Wilson get "Einstein on the Beach," their avant-garde "opera," off for its opening in Europe.
Benefit Performance
Mr. Glass, who first met Tibetans in India, said: "They're honest and good-natured and optimistic, and they think we are too. They like us because they work hard and they think we do too. And they don't whine; if they do complain they manage to make a joke of it."
When Kalsang Yeshe worked in a wire factory in Paterson, N.J., in his first six months in the United States, this 29-year-old former monk—who has a master's degree in Buddhist philosophy from Benares Sanskrit University — got a wry amusement out of being called the chip man. "I was going around gathering up the metal chips, he said with a laugh.
Now he is teaching again: the Tibetan language at the University of Pennsylvania, Buddhist philosophy at Columbia University's Tibetan Studies Society, and both language and philosophy at the Tibet Center and to private pupils.
All of the Tibetans who now are here fled to India when the Chinese came, staying from 2 to 12 years before coming to New York, and after the heat and humidity of India the air here seems admirable. Also they can buy meat here; in India it was almost unobtainable.
What they like to remember about their stay in India is that it enabled them to learn English.
"It wasn't hard for me to adjust here," said Mrs. Wangdu, "because I'd gone to a high school in New Delhi where most of the students were Americans. I made my adjustment there."

Tseten Wangyal is studying accounting at a community college and Tiley Akar has graduated with a major in journalism from the University of Arizona and will be doing graduate work at the New School for Social Research.
As for Pema Thonden, she has a job at the Keystone Press Agency.
Tsering Dorje, who studied government and economics at Cornell, runs Tibetan Arts and Crafts, a shop on Madison Avenue near 62d Street. Tenzing Tsering assists in the shop.
Thupten Norbu, a nomad from eastern Tibet, is a thangka painter and restorer who is finding enough work to keep him busy. Dorjee Yudon Yuthok, whose husband was a Cabinet minister and whose brother was the senior Cabinet minister, taught at the University of Pennsylvania until her recent retirement. Her daughter is Thupten Yuthok, the nurse at New York Hospital.
The Tibetans want their children to learn about the customs, such as a young woman's being permitted to wear the pundhen, a gaily striped apron. From the day she becomes marriageable; the traditions, such as the giving by both men and women of not-to-be-worn but to-be-passed-on white silk scarves as well as flowers or thank-you notes or leave visiting cards; and the foods, such as osun, a long tube-like vegetable with little branches which the Tibetans are convinced grows nowhere else. (They cut off the branches, peeled and sliced the tube and fried it with meat.)

Not many of the Tibetans were able to bring anything out of their homeland, but Phintso and Pema Thonden have a tea churn and white their daughters, 11-year-old Chimi and 9-year-old Yodon, who go to Public School 40, may never have drunk the strong rich brew that used to come out of it, they know how it ameliorated the cold. Sonam and Thupten Chuki Wangdu are proud that little Dechen knows the English alphabet, but they are determined to keep on speaking Tibetan so that Dechen will know that, too.

"Even if she never sees our country, we want her to know what it was like," said Mrs. Wangdu as she poured tea. Asked what kind it was, since it was definitely not Tibetan buttered tea, she smiled and said, "Lipton's."

The Iconoclastic Lichine Once More Invades Vineyards of Controversy

By FRANK J. PRIAL

One day last spring, when the Bordeaux wine market was at its nadir, a well-known St. Emilion grower contemplated the cold rain pelting down on his vineyards, thought of his bills and his unsold wine and said to a visitor: "Maybe Lichine has the answer."

It was a great tribute and an even greater irony. Once, Bordeaux's conservative wine people shuddered at the name of Alexis Lichine—

Avenue seems small. The few genuine raconteurs in the world know they have to make up for the rest of us. Thus, when someone at Mr. Lichine's table begins gushing banalities about the wine or the weather, he is very likely to say: "That reminds me of this ridiculous little plane I had to charter in Marseilles once just to be on time for lunch with Grace and Ranier."

Or it may be a devastating

Alexis Lichine introduced wine merchandising methods in France.

Wine Talk

the upstart, the stranger, the iconoclast who brushed aside the traditions of centuries. Why, he plastered his name on billboards in the vineyards and he even wanted to junk the 1855 classification, the sacred listing of the top 62 chateaus in Bordeaux.

The cautious Bordelais never did pick up the custom of vineyard billboards, but they have accepted the first major change in the 1855 listing, putting Chateau Mouton-Rothschild among the first growths.

Laying the Groundwork

But they learned far more valuable things from Alexis Lichine: modern merchandising and the fact that the United States was an untapped market for wine. It was Lichine who, along with a handful of other early prophets, in the 1950's traveled tirelessly up and down America, laying the groundwork for the wine boom of the late 1960's.

But the boom had turned to bust by last April and, for all practical purposes, Alexis Lichine was not even in the wine business anymore, which may come as a surprise to enthusiasts who have been drinking Alexis Lichine wines over the last five years or so.

He still owned Prieure-Lichine, his chateau near Margaux, but he had sold Alexis Lichine & Co. in 1968 to Bass Charrington, the giant British brewing concern. Under terms of the agreement, it got the exclusive use of his name for seven years.

That agreement ended in October, Mr. Lichine, who had helped start the biggest wine boom in modern times, and then had to sit out away from the business, quickly jumped in.

Concern Sold Again

When the boom turned to dust, many of the big companies that had thought meant quick profits back in the mid-1960's wanted to get out. Bass-Charrington was one of them. Its interests in this country were picked up by Somerset Imports, an arm of Norton Simon Inc. Alexis Lichine came along as a consultant.

Now, at the age of 63, he is back on the road, where, he is convinced, any good salesman should be. "I feel 20 years younger," he said the other day.

Just as there are immutable laws of nature, so are there immutable laws of social discourse and one of them is that Alexis Lichine will dominate any room he enters. When he is in full cry, shredding the reputation of some Burgundy shipper or extolling the beauties of the Medoc in fall, even his vast apartment on Fifth anecdote about a famous person he dined with last week in Dallas or the night before in London. Or it might be a few choice French imprecations aimed at the kitchen door and Madame Lasserre, his cook, who reigns beyond. She, it should be noted, fields his epithets with a panache to match his own.

Alexis Lichine was born in Moscow, the son of a prosperous banker and lawyer. The family fled to New York in 1917, stayed for two years, then moved to Paris where they operated tour buses. Barely into his teens, Mr. Lichine became a tour director. He did well, and, as Joseph Wechsberg remarked of him many years later, realized for the first time "that words, used glibly enough, can be converted into money."

At about the same time, Mr. Lichine was beginning his life-long affair with wine. He soon discovered that he had an extraordinary palate for tasting and understanding them. He came back to the United States, attended the University of Pennsylvania briefly, then returned to France. There, he became a prize advertising space salesman for the Paris edition of The New York Herald Tribune.

Joins Frank Schoonmaker

"Selling wine ads convinced me there was a future in the wine business in the United States," he recalled recently. He returned here shortly after repeal, but the business turned out to be tougher than he had anticipated and he became a clerk in a liquor store. Then he joined the late Frank Schoonmaker, the journalist who had become a wine entrepreneur. Mr. Lichine learned to sell wine in the backwaters where even Scotch was effete. Then he went back again to France, at Mr. Schoonmaker's expense, to learn that part of the business from the cellars of Burgundy to the docks of Bordeaux.

"I found that you had to be tough," he said. "The wine maker, the fellow who puts the stuff in the barrel, will watch you like a hawk and as soon as he detects the slightest weakness, he'll despise you for a phony."

During the war, Mr. Lichine served in Army intelligence in North Africa and France. After the Allied invasion in 1944, he became an aide to General Eisenhower, planning and presiding over sumptuous dinners at Supreme Allied Headquarters.

Headquarters

After the war, Mr. Lichine resumed his peripatetic wine career, ranging the land, lecturing, cajoling and selling a few bottles wherever he could. Not a few wine experts date America's present fascination with wine from those days.

While Lichine the salesman was on the hustings in this country, Lichine the promoter was busy abroad. He lined up backers and bought, first, vineyards in Burgundy, then two chateaus in Bordeaux—Prieure-Lichine in Cantenac, which he still owns, and Lascombes in Margaux, now owned by British interests.

He was among the first to recognize, in those post-war years, the coming popularity of the Caribbean and, when he was not selling wine to the few hotels in the islands, he was busy taking options on choice parcels of beachfront.

In his efforts to proselytize the grape, it was probably inevitable that Alexis Lichine would turn to the printed page, just as Frank Schoonmaker had done. His first book, "The Wines of France," appeared in 1951. Alexis Lichine's Encyclopedia of Wines and Spirits, originally due in 1959, was published in 1967 and revised in 1972.

Not one for dull research, or the lonely slog of the writer, Mr. Lichine enlisted William E. Masses to do much of the work on the first book; and "I was" aided by William Fifield to tackle the second.

In 1955, he founded Alexis Lichine & Company in Bordeaux to ship wines to Alexis Lichine & Company, his importing business in New York.

In the mid 1960's, he formed an alliance with one of the big British brewing companies then interested in getting into the wine business. "It was a deal," he said, "swallowed up by an even larger British brewing company and Lichine, disgusted with the management of the new conglomerate, sold them everything but the Prieure."

Under terms of the sale, he was prohibited from using his name in the wine business for at least seven years. "The irony was staggering," an old Lichine associate said recently, "there was a deal with one of the most famous names in the wine business, barred from using it; just as America was embarking on one of the greatest wine-bubbling binges in history."

His first marriage, in 1946, to the Countess Renee de Villeneuve, whom he had met in Marseilles during the war, lasted only a year.

Two More Marriages

In 1956, he married Gisèle Edembourg, with whom he had two children, a daughter, Alexandra, 20, and a son, Sacha, 15. His third marriage, in 1965, was to the actress Ariene Dahl. That marriage was annulled after two years and Mr. Lichine has contented himself since then with escorting a succession of handsome young women here, in France and in Barbados, where he has wintered for more than a decade, when time and money permitted.

Last year, his seven years of exile over, Mr. Lichine went back into the commercial end of the wine business—with almost as much irony as he had left it. His old business had fallen on evil days. In part, he says, because of the general collapse of the wine business and in part because of the ineptitude of some of the people who had taken it over.

It was for sale and Norton Simon Industries bought it. Mr. Lichine was brought in as a consultant and as a vice president of Somerset Imports, the concern that handles Alexis Lichine wines here. Not only was he reunited with his old business, he was reunited, in a profession, with his own name.

He is also a salaried director of Chateau Haut-Brion.

In the last few months, he has made two or three swings around this country, lecturing for three hours at a clip to retailers, wine enthusiasts, department store customers, to anyone, in fact, who might possibly buy a bottle of wine.

With a few hours sleep in New York, he is off to France, driving through the Loire Valley one week, the Rhone the next, visiting old friends in Burgundy or scrutinizing his own vines at the Prieure. He will be in Bordeaux for Easter, he said the other day, and plans to make at least three more trips to France between then and the harvest in September. At 63, he is going and working harder than before. He has since his first fight with Philippe de Rothschild, owner of Chateau Haut-Brion. Last fall, Lichine reported that he had had to pick his early, meaning lesser quality wine. Baron Philippe is rugged and has three sons. Mr. Lichine's story with a wicked is a long time since he is enjoying it all Westchester County commu- nities, earning part of the estimated $1 million that the program has generated since it began on a countywide basis in 1974. The jobs range from the $13 an hour earned by Chris Walsh for two hours of construction site cleanup to $1 an hour baby sitting. Anne Lane, who is 16, got a job in Florida from a family in nearby Briarcliff. "They don't have a Y.E.S. program in Briarcliff, so the family called here and I got the job," she said. Westchester's Y.E.S. program, which has inspired a similar network in Putnam County, began five years ago as "Rent a Kid" in Yonkers. The then Mayor there, Alfred B. DeBello, applied and expanded the idea when he became county executive two years ago. Throughout the Country Employment for youth is hardly a new concept, operating under titles such as Job Marts and Jobs Bureau, or even under the same Y.E.S. banner, in other communities throughout the United States. Keith Drake, Westchester's Manpower director, and Rhoda Barr, his contract coordinator, expanded it, however. They put it on a year-round basis, provided Federal funds under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act and established partnership arrangements between neighboring communities. "We've channeled roughly $32,000 in [Federal] funds into the participating cities, towns and villages," Mr. Drake said, "but this, in turn, has generated even larger contributions from business and others in the communities themselves." Pleasantville, for example, receives $2,000 in the Federal funds provided through Mr. Drake's office, $2,000 from the village treasury and $2,000 from business and other contributors. John Carey, a member of the Pleasantville Y.E.S. program's board of directors, said, "We use the money for expenses and to pay Mrs. Nancy Rote, the only salaried employee. "You cannot run an effective program with volunteers," Mr. Carey noted. Role for Ex-Teacher Mrs. Rote, a former teacher and the mother of two young children, handles the registration, which now includes roughly half of the 600 students in Pleasantville High School, as well as the inquiries for jobs. She runs the Y.E.S. office in the school's student lounge from 10 A.M. through the lunch hour, when scores of boys and girls drop by to check on after school work. She then takes other phone calls at home, partially through use of an answering service. The key to the Y.E.S. system, Mrs. Barr said, is its local base. "Business people and home owners can hire students without hesitation because they are local kids and because they have been interviewed by Mrs. Rote, who is known to them. Chris Walsh works 30 hours a week after school as a janitor in a synagogue, a job that began as a one-time effort. Krista Hendy spoke of an elderly couple, both invalids, "who just needed somebody to dust and vacuum, somebody they could afford." Prices are determined by the employer and employee, but Mrs. Rote warns callers who want to pay $1 an hour that they are unlikely to find anyone. the school's graduates have gone on to college.

Alan Zalkind, the director of the impact program in Newark, and Mayor Kenneth A. Gibson are pleased with the results.

Mr. Gibson contends that the overall impact program is a major success because it has awakened the community and provided it and its leaders with "valuable insights" in combating violent crime.

Program Called Success

The Ironbound section of the city is a sprawling, polyglot collection of predominantly white neighborhoods surrounded by and interlaced with industry. It is mostly poor and consists of working-class families living in modest single-family homes. Juvenile crime is a major concern.

Independence High, which had its genesis in two teenage youth centers started by the VISTA volunteers in the late 1960's, occupies an old three-story loft building on the corner of Van Buren and Elm Streets that was once a toy factory.

The school has 75 students and a staff of 22 full-time and part-time administrators, counselors and teachers.

The average cost of teaching a student for one year is around $2,000, compared with the institutional or correctional cost for a juvenile delinquent of close to $10,000 a year.

Brushes With the Law

About half the students had been arrested for various crimes, while the other half had either had brushes with the law or were truants from conventional schools in the city.

At Independence, students enjoy a high degree of freedom and the choice to pursue either academic and technical courses, or a combination of both. About half of them are white, with the rest black or Hispanic.

Judy Condento, 21, who never has been in trouble with the law, bridled the other day over her designation as a delinquent.

"Listen," Mrs. Condento said in an interview in the school's makeshift library, "I don't want to be just another person who works in a factory assembly line stamping out things like cans. I want a chance to design, to create, maybe even to say what a can should look like."

According to Patricia Jarecke, 27, a former VISTA volunteer who is the school's administrator, the curriculum consists of basic courses in reading, mathematics, histo-

To Swedish Labor, Equality Is Being Boss

By LEONARD SILK The King of Sweden sat as a member of the audience at a hotel in Washington this week, listening to a debate among Swedish and American industrialists, labor leaders and politicians over the link between productivity and industrial democracy.

Economic Analysis years on economics, sociology, Swedish industry and the organization of the labor market as part of his training for the monarchy. He has spent considerable time touring factories, talking with workers as well as bosses and foremen.

These are matters of no small importance in Sweden today. The Swedish Government last week presented a bill to Parliament that would radically change the role of Swedish workers. If enacted, the law would give labor the right to bargain for, in the words of Stig Gustafsson, a Social Democratic member of Parliament and general counsel of the overall union for white-collar workers, "at least an equal voice in all aspects of corporate life."

That would mean that about three-fourths of Sweden's free-enterprise system would be affected. And, since the plan would continue in effect indefinitely, it would imply that after a period of years virtually the whole of Swedish industry would pass into the control of the workers.

S.E.C. PLANS GUIDE ON LISTING BRIBES

Penalties Urged for Record Falsification—AMF Tells of Payments Overseas

WASHINGTON, April 6 (UPI)—The Securities and Exchange Commission will provide guidelines by May 1 to corporations for disclosing improper payments to foreign government officials, the commission's chairman, Roderick M. Hills, said today. These guidelines will come in the form of a report to the Senate Banking Committee and other "committees," Mr. Hills said at a National Press Club breakfast.

The chairman also said he would propose that Federal laws be changed to allow the S.E.C. and other agencies to punish corporate officials involved in questionable payments.

The focus of criminal punishment would deal not with the morality of the payments but with falsification of books and records, he said. Improper accounting is now subject only to civil action such as an agreement not to repeat the activity.

[AMF Inc. said it had learned about $1.5 million of questionable payments made by some of its foreign subsidiaries in the last five years.]

Mr. Hills said that the Senate Ethics Committee had received investigative files of the Gulf Oil Corporation's illegal contributions to members of Congress. He said the committee had requested and was given the S.E.C.'s files used in compiling a civil court case against Gulf last year.

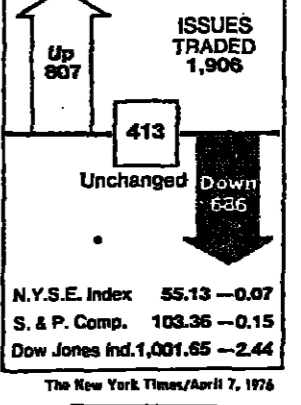

Gulf consented to S.E.C. charges that it had diverted $12.3 million in corporate funds for payoffs to foreign government officials and an estimated $5 million in illegal campaign contributions in the United States.

Questionable payments of tens of thousands of dollars were allegedly made to the Senate Republican leader, Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, and Senators Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota, and Russell B. Long, Democrat of Louisiana. All three Senators have denied any wrongdoing.

Asked today whether the Ethics Committee had asked for the S.E.C. data on Gulf, Mr. Hills responded, "We provided them with the information they requested."

He also said the S.E.C. had uncovered no evidence to confirm reports that the Central Intelligence Agency knew of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation's alleged bribery payments to Japanese Government officials.

Investors Appear Skittish—Dow Industrials Fall 2.44 Amid Growing Volume

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN A burst of selling hit the stock market late yesterday to leave the Dow Jones industrial average teetering just above the 1,000 mark—its best ground for the last several weeks.

There was no specific news to account for the afternoon price retreat, but it underscored the skittishness of many investors and the tendency of some traders to take their profits and run.

After moving ahead 12 1/2 points on Monday, the market extended its strength yesterday morning. But selling pressures in the final hour of trading on the New York Stock Exchange saw the Dow close at 1,001.65 with a loss of 2.44 points.

As an example of a blue-chip hit by profit taking, Eastman Kodak fell 2 1/2 to 116 1/2, thereby wiping out its advance of last week when the stock benefited from the company's introduction of a line of copier products.

Volume on the Big Board expanded to 24.17 million shares from the previous day's 21.49 million shares. It never reached 18 million shares in any of last week's sessions.

SALE OF NOTES PLANNED

A New York Pension Fund Purchases the Securities at 7% Interest Cost

By JOHN H. ALLAN New York State, which is seeking to test its standing among investors, received no bids from banks or investment firms yesterday when it tried to sell a $15 million bond issue.

Instead, it sold the securities to the Common Retirement Fund, a state employee pension fund at an interest cost of 7 percent. The banks and investment houses that normally bid for New York State bonds said that they did not bid because the state had not prepared an official offering statement in time.

On Monday the state published an 82-page official statement describing its planned $2.75 billion sale of tax and revenue anticipation notes this spring, but the description of the large short-term financing was not suitable for the sale of bonds, some of which do not mature until 2001.

The Common Retirement Fund plans to sell the bonds it purchased yesterday along with $9.5 million of 8 1/2 percent state bonds it bought in December as soon as the large sale of notes is completed this spring, Arthur Levitt, the state controller, said.

The $2.75 billion tax and revenue anticipation note offering will include $1 billion to be sold to banks in the New York Clearing House Association and $1.75 billion to other investors, chiefly large out-of-state banks. Other financial institutions and corporations.

The direct placement of these notes is part of a borrowing plan to raise approximately $4.53 billion for the state's 1987-1977 fiscal year.

The borrowing plan also includes the sale of about $970 million additional tax and revenue anticipation notes in this first quarter," Mr. Jones declared. He said that the 1975 first quarter was severely affected by a depressed level of consumer goods sale, and unusually low shipments of large steam turbine-generators.

The most significant factors in the improvement in earnings since the third quarter last year were the consumer and industrial power-equipment categories, the company said. Consumer goods, benefiting from im-

G.E. Sales and Earnings Hit Peaks in 1st Quarter

By CLARE M. RECKERT The General Electric Company, the nation's largest producer of electrical and electronic equipment, reported yesterday record sales and earnings in the first quarter. Sales increased 10 percent and earnings 82 percent.

Net earnings climbed to $135.4 million, or 73 cents a share, from the $74.4 million or 41 cents a share, in the initial quarter of 1975, the "low point of the recession," Reginald H. Jones, chairman, said.

Comparing this year's results with the more normal first quarter in 1974, earnings advanced 10.7 percent from $122.3 million or 67 cents a share while sales were 12.3 percent higher than the $2,909 billion two years earlier.

Sales of products and services totaled $3.268 billion, up from $2,979 billion in the first three months last year. Earnings as a percentage of sales were 4.1 percent compared with 2.5 percent. The report also noted that the per share earnings were based on an average of 184,427,000 shares outstanding this year and 182,781,000 shares a year ago.

If the United States economy continues to recover, the company expects earnings for 1976 to exceed the $3.17 a share result in 1975, "although the percentage of improvement for the year will obviously not be at rose to 23.27 million shares from 25.11 million shares. Because of the strong trend of stock prices during the morning, the market was able to register well over 100 yearly highs, compared with only a handful of new lows.

One of the highs was CBS, rising a point to 55 1/2. The stock is a current recommendation of Argus Research, which comments that "the company has traveled a good distance down the road to achieving a consistent pattern of earnings growth."

Issue Is Planned Engelhard Minerals, down 7/8 to 30 3/4, disclosed plans to make a $100 million offering of convertible debentures. The market remained particularly sensitive to earnings forecasts. Interpace, a maker of concrete pipe and other products, rose 1/2 to 28 1/2 after the company estimated that its profit in the 1978 first quarter would double the year-earlier figure.

Westvac, also predicting a substantial gain in quarterly net income, added 3/4 to 42 1/2. On the other hand, Watkins-Johnson dropped 1/2 to 25 1/2 after losing 3 1/2 points on Monday. Management has indicated that earnings for the April quarter may be down as much as 50 percent.

Buyer was up a point to 38 after the company declared a 2-for-1 stock split and raised its cash dividend. Gain Extended Kaufman & Broad, up 1/2 to 10 1/2, in active trading, continued to move ahead amid prospects for improvement in the long-dressed housing industry. The stock was recommended earlier this month at 9 1/2 as a "short-term trading vehicle" by Smith-Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Both I.B.M. and General Motors, for the second straight day, traded at their highest prices since 1973. However, I.B.M. finished the session at 289 3/4, with a loss of 2 1/2 points. General Motors edged up 1/2 to 7 1/2.

Robert R. Beaudette, senior trust investment officer for the American Security Bank in Washington, D.C., in a talk before the New York Society of Security Analysts, commented: "I.B.M. remains our favorite growth stock and our largest holding."

Picking Dodge rose 1/2 to 44 1/2, benefiting from an optimistic appraisal of copper producers in Barron's. Among stocks dropping more than 2 points were Colt Industries, Halliburton and Teledyne.

Domestic Makers Of Bleached Board Increasing Prices By GENE SMITH Three domestic producers of bleached board announced yesterday price increases on their products. The moves follow by a day increases of $20 to $25 a ton on kraft inboard by three major Canadian producers.

Price The International Paper Company and Westvaco said their prices for solid bleached board would go up by $20 a ton. International's price change will become effective April 15 and Westvaco's on May 31. The Continental Can Company said it planned to raise its prices by an average of 6 percent as of May 1. It would not give a dollar figure.

The increases come at a time when the Government's Council on Wage and Price Stability is conducting a study of prices in the paper industry. That body said that "from November 1975, through February 1976, wholesale prices of pulp, paper and allied products have increased at a 10.9 percent annual rate... more than four times faster than the rate of increase for all commodities—2.7 percent."

NORTHERN TELECOM LIMITED, MONTREAL, QUEBEC

THE NEW NAME IN WORLD TELECOMMUNICATIONS.

Prior to March 1, Northern Telecom Limited was known as Northern Electric Company, Limited.

While for much of the world's industry 1975 was a year they would rather forget, for us it was another good year. It was the third year in succession in which we achieved record sales and record earnings. It was our first billion-dollar sales year. Sales reached $1,018.4 million, five percent higher than those of 1974 and 66 percent higher than those achieved in 1973. Net earnings were $67.5 million, 26 percent higher than those of 1974 and 111 percent higher than earnings of 1973. Earnings per share in 1975 rose to $2.55 compared with $2.05 in 1974 and $1.35 in 1973.

We consolidated our position as the second largest manufacturer of telecommunications equipment in North America—the largest outside the U.S. Bell System. We continued to grow and expand. We bought or built six new factories in Canada and the United States. At year-end, we operated 33 factories—24 in Canada, six in the United States and one each in Turkey, Ireland and Malaysia. Our products continued to lead the market in key areas.

The Pulse electronic private automatic branch exchange is the market leader in North America. It is now complemented by our new SL-1 digital EPABX, the first production models of which came off production lines late in 1975. By March we had orders or commitments for 89 systems. The SP-1 electronic central office switching systems continue to outsell all other systems outside the Bell System. To date more than 1.2 million lines of SP-1 have been ordered in North America and some 600,000 lines are in service. We completed, and cutover, the first link in the world's longest commercial digital cable transmission system, using our LD-4 high-capacity coaxial cable. LD-4 is designed to provide circuits for over 20,000 simultaneous two-way telephone conversations or a mix of TV, data and voice traffic. Those are but a few of the highlights of Northern Telecom's 1975. If you would like to read more and get to know more about us, send for our annual report. Write, Roy T. Cottier, vice-president, corporate relations, Post Office Box 6123, Montreal, Que. H3C 3J5.

Ads Part of a Ransom Demand

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
Leading newspapers in New York, London and Paris yesterday carried an advertisement...

(The Venezuelan Government reacted to the ads by announcing it would take over the company's local affiliate.)

Executives at both the Newspaper Advertising Bureau and Editor & Publisher, the trade publication, could remember no similar ad.

William F. Niehaus was kidnapped on Feb. 27, and the following day a group called the Revolutionary Command claimed responsibility.

According to Owens-Illinois the guerrillas delivered the "political manifesto" to a number of Venezuelan officials...

The Revolutionary Command Argimiro Gabaldon Operation, which signed the ad, contends in it that its "intelligence service" has documents to back such a charge.

The group denounces the nationalization law as "the capitalist renegotiation of our independence" and calls on the people to "strengthen their fight for socialism."

The advertising acceptability department of The Times waived some of its usual re-

Lorillard Trims Callo Billings

One of the more exciting advertising news stories of 1974 was when little Callo & Carroll, with about $3 million in billings, landed some Lorillard billings then put in the neighborhood of $5 million.

Well, now it appears that that relationship had the same lasting qualities as a wisp of cigarette smoke as the Old Gold brand is switched to deGarmo and the small cigars go in-house.

When Callo & Carroll got the business from the division of Loews Theatres it also got Joseph A. Albanese, who had been senior management supervisor on Lorillard at Grey Advertising, which lost the account after 13 years.

It's sort of a Madison Avenue story.

requirements in running the ad because it concluded "we can be instrumental in saving someone's life." The ad was a half-page, or 1,200 lines, costing $6,432 at the open rate.

In a statement William W. Coleman, vice president and general manager of the Western Hemisphere Division of the International Group, said the ad is part of the company's effort "to do everything reasonable to obtain the release of Mr. Niehaus."

Additionally, he said, the company will make a donation to a "charity of the kidnapers" and give all Venezuelan employees of the company a bonus of $116.

When the guerrilla group claimed responsibility for the kidnapping, it also said that Mr. Niehaus would be tried as "an enemy of the people."

Asked if it was prepared to respond to any charges in the ad, a company spokesman said that Owens-Illinois would have no comment beyond the content of the Coleman statement.

It is recalled that Hearst's San Francisco Examiner ran several statements of the Symbionese Liberation Army while Patricia Hearst was still missing. They were not, however, ads.

Revised Behold Spot Upheld

The Drackett Company, which revised its tough competitive TV commercial in which it compares its Behold furniture polish to S. C. Johnson's Pledge, has had the revised spot upheld by the National Advertising Review Board despite another challenge from S. C. Johnson.

The five-member panel of the N.A.R.B. was supporting a decision made by the National Advertising Division of the Council of Better Business Bureaus.

Nicholas M. Evans, president of Drackett, a subsidiary of Bristol-Myers, is quoted as saying, "This is an important decision, because it recognizes the significant role and responsibility of comparative advertising in helping consumers to make informed buying choices."

The N.A.R.B. found the original commercial "had the capacity to deceive by implying overall superiority." It cleared the revised commercial that compares Behold to Pledge on the basis of price and ability to clean grease or wax marks.

Audience Study Subscribers

Erdo & Morgan, the research firm, has announced that it now has seven publications signed up for its Comparable Profile Measurement Study. They are Travel & Leisure, New York, Signature, Fortune, Money, Dun's Review and Book Digest. It's a study of subscriber audiences. Every home should have one.

New-Products on Upswing

March was a hot month for new-product introduction, the hottest March for at least the last five years. There were 86 according to the Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample New Product News, which also points out that March was the first month this year that exceeded 1975 levels.

The introductions included Yabba Dabba Dew Soft Drink Mix, Blow Pop Flavors, Gr-r-r-oots Banana Chips and Dragon Teeth. Goodness, how did we manage to survive without them?

Guerrilla Advertisement Spurs Owens Takeover by Venezuela

CARACAS, April 6—The Venezuelan Government, in a surprise move, said tonight that it would take over the local affiliate of Owens-Illinois Inc. after the company had "violated constitutional norms and Venezuelan laws."

The action, announced by State Information Minister Guido Grooscors, was taken after Owens-Illinois paid for the advertisement of information released by Venezuelan guerrillas in The New York Times, The Times of London and Le-Monde of Paris, which the Venezuelan Government opposed. Guerrillas who have been holding the president of the American glass company hostage since Feb. 27 demanded that certain documents be published here and in the international press before the American executive, William F. Niehaus, would be released.

The abrupt announcement that the Government would take over Owens-Illinois assets here—the first such action in the two years since President Carlos Andres Perez was elected, amounts to a nationalization of the company. Officials said the plan was "just compensation, one of the few democratically elected governments in Latin America, nuclear energy and nuclear fuels is an essential to the continued strength and prosperity of our country," Mr. Komes said in his testimony.

The General Accounting Office, in an analysis of the Ford proposal made public in November, said the plan was "not acceptable." The G.A.O. said its "fundamental shortcoming" was that the proposal would guarantee the consortium a good profit while shifting most of the risk to Government.

richment Associates two weeks ago declined to testify before the committee on the grounds that they were still negotiating a contract with the Government. The executives changed their minds, however, and agreed to testify, after Senator John O. Pastore, Democrat of Rhode Island, said the proposed legislation would never be considered by Congress unless they did.

Mr. Pastore is chairman of the joint committee. In a second development the joint committee decided after a closed meeting this afternoon to hold a public hearing next week on the contract arrangement under which a quasi-Government organization would build the liquid-metal, fast-breeder reactor on the Clinch River in Tennessee.

Add TV to your National Geographic schedule and double your coverage in Wilton, Conn.

Yes, virtually half the families in this upper income suburb are National Geographic subscriber households. And the same is true of many other affluent suburbs coast to coast. So by adding prime time to prime print you might come close to achieving 100% coverage in these areas.

If you know how the huge circulation of National Geographic concentrates in the higher income groups, this penetration should come as no surprise to you. No other medium is so suited for reaching large numbers of people with money to spend.

See how National Geographic complements your TV schedule.

If you're selling a product or service which requires a broad base and huge numbers, television may be your primary medium. We can't quarrel with that and wouldn't want to. For even though our circulation is larger than Time and Newsweek combined, we don't want to get into a shouting match with television. However, if you need to reach people in the upper income groups, National Geographic is the logical first place to look.

Where TV viewing drops off, National Geographic picks up.

Syndicated research shows that television viewing falls off among people with higher incomes and educations. And this is precisely where the Geographic's strength is greatest. By adding National Geographic to your TV schedule, you reach more of the people who watch TV less...the people with more money to spend.

Highest median income of any major publication in America.

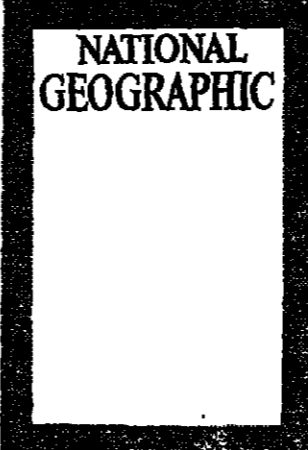

The higher the income, the greater the Geographic's penetrating power. For example, in the top income group where TV viewing drops off, National Geographic reaches more than eight million readers who have a median income of $27,638. And our total adult audience—22 million readers—has a median income of $16,696, the highest of any major publication in America.

Almost 15 million readers between 18 and 49 years old.

More than two-thirds of our 22 million adult readers are between 18 and 49 years old, certainly the prime years for buying goods and utilizing services. And we have the numbers that prove they do! 89% of our families own their own homes. 93% of our households own at least one car. More than half own two cars or more. More than a third bought a new car in the last three years. 74% own color TV sets. 72% have sophisticated stereo systems. And nearly half of our readers took at least two vacations last year.

When you add print to prime time, make it prime print.

By adding National Geographic to your present TV schedule you'll be reaching more people with more money to spend. And by combining National Geographic with television you can give your advertising message the visual immediacy of prime time and the lasting impression of Prime Print.

Nigerian Says Nation Isn't Rich

Frequent reference to Nigeria's "oil riches" has given a misleading impression that the West African country faces no financial problems in development, the Nigerian Ambassador to the United States, E. Olu Sanu, said yesterday.

The New York Times
Burton G. Malkiel
Predicts an increase in world trade this year.

"I wish to stress that, although Nigeria has great potential, we are not a rich nation," he asserted at a luncheon of the Nigerian American Chamber of Commerce at the Pierre Hotel.

Mr. Sanu said, "We need the partnership of all well-meaning people. In addition to a recent decline of oil exports, Nigerian development has been hampered by port and transport congestion, as well as a military coup in July and an unsuccessful counter-coup in February. Mr. Sanu predicted that the pile-up of cement and other cargo at Lagos, the main port, would be cleared before the end of the year.

ate stocks and bonds. The Saudi agency first bought American securities worth more than $100 million in June, 1974.

But two informants emphasized that the Saudi agency itself did not try to manage its United States portfolio. They said these holdings were bought on behalf of the agency by its financial representatives in the United States, including five banks—three with headquarters in New York City.

Other trends have continued and innovations have appeared. Last summer the Saudi agency lent $100 million to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company in a private placement, the informants said.

In recent months the Saudi agency is understood to have made other direct loans around the world, to a Scottish utility concern among other recipients.

States Government bonds said to have increased by $2 billion to their present $6 billion in the 10 months or so.

The agency's interest in stocks is understood to have been something no more than $20 billion early in 1975, about $42 billion—gold, foreign currency overseas investments—end of that year.

Ford Dedicates LBJ Grove

After walking with Lady Bird Johnson among the newly planted dogwood and pine trees, President Ford dedicated 15 acres of Federal land along the Potomac River yesterday as a memorial to the late President Lyndon B. Johnson. The LBJ Memorial Grove, as it will be called, is near the Lincoln Memorial, and Mrs. Johnson said that "one lovely spring day of 1963," near the end of the Johnson presidency, she and her husband "had an impromptu picnic" on the site.

The National Park Service estimated that the ceremony was attended by 1,000 persons, including the late President's daughters, Luci Baines Johnson, Riane Johnson and Lynda Bird Johnson Robb, her husband, Charles and their two daughters, Betty Ford, missed the ceremony because of a conflicting engagement, but arranged to attend a post-dedication luncheon at the Robb home.

In Rochester, Dr. John F. Edland, the pathologist who reported the gunshot deaths of Attica hostages, has returned to his job as Monroe County medical examiner after six months in a psychiatric hospital. He described himself as "an Attica casualty" yesterday.

Dr. Edland's autopsies became major news after the police shot and killed the hostages with guns Sept. 13, 1971, to end the five-day rebellion. State officials said that nine hostages had been killed, several by having their throats slashed by prisoners, and that two were killed before the first day. Dr. Edland reported that all had died of gunshot wounds in the police assault, with no slashed throats. His findings were disputed by state officials until confirmed by other pathologists.

"I couldn't accept the fact that people didn't believe me," Dr. Edland said, adding that "the state turned against me." He said, "Being a pathologist isn't a normal way of spending your life—after Attica, it became more difficult." Last September he was arrested on a charge of driving while intoxicated and entered the private hospital soon afterward.

After 40 years of self-imposed exile during the Franco regime, the 58-year-old "dean" of Spanish letters, Salvador de Madariaga, slipped quietly back into Spain Monday night. The writer and former diplomat went from his home in Switzerland to Zaragoza in a chartered plane to deliver a lecture. After traveling in the Spanish provinces, he will go to Madrid next month to accept into the Royal Spanish Academy. Mr. Madariaga served the Spanish republic as an ambassador, then broke with it. He refused to take sides in the Spanish Civil War, but later refused to live in Spain under Gen. Francisco Franco.

Lev Navrosov, defendant in a $3-million libel suit filed by Golda Meir, was denounced yesterday by "twipsaw" tactics by Justice Hyman Korn in the State Supreme Court, who ordered him to hire a lawyer. Co-defendants in the suit are the American Jewish Committee, publisher of Commentary magazine, and Norman Podhoretz, editor of the magazine, which published Mr. Navrosov's charges that Mrs. Meir, while Israeli ambassador, provided a list of Soviet Jews, many of whom later died in Soviet prison camps.

Justice Korn granted the motion by Mrs. Meir's lawyers not to accept Mr. Navrosov's answer to her suit. He has been pleading his own case, with a "legal adviser" in the background, the court noted. The answer, Justice Korn said, showed "gross disregard" for law and "unnecessary, impudently, scandalous and prejudicial" matter, an exercise in vitriol replete with personal attacks on Mrs. Meir.

Kai Siegbahn, head of the institute of Physics at Sweden's Uppsala University, visited Columbia University Monday to receive its Medal. The award recognized Dr. Siegbahn's development of electron spectroscopy for chemical analysis, now known as ESCA—a technique for the study and measurement of radiation in understanding molecules.

Charles Frederick Chandler founded Columbia's department of chemistry, which awarded the university's first Ph.D. in 1875, and was a co-founder of the American Chemical Society, now holding its centennial meeting here. Seven previous winners of the medal have later won Nobel Prizes. Dr. Siegbahn is the 57-year-old son of Karl Maune Siegbahn, aged 88, the nuclear physicist who won the 1924 Nobel Prize for his work with X-ray spectroscopy.

A fire near Plymouth, Mass., sweeping over woods and farmland close to Myrtle Standish State Forest, reached the 400-acre estate of Dick Gregory. It burned a caretaker's cottage, vacant at the time, within a quarter-mile of the home where the comedian and political activist has lived with his wife, Gillian, and their 10 children since moving from Chicago in 1973.

The Connecticut Legislature passed yesterday a bill that will give Barry Brunelle the $10,000 lottery prize he was denied because he was 17 instead of 18 years old. Gov. Ella T. Grasso has said she will be happy to sign the bill. The state's Commission on Special Revenue had refused to pay off on Mr. Brunelle's winning ticket—though it offered to return his $1 purchase price—because state law requires lottery ticket purchasers to be 18 or older. There is no specific law making it illegal for a minor to collect lottery prize money, but now the Legislature is considering one.

The device is disconnected, according to the testimony of physicians. "The decisions as to how and when the respirator will be removed will be made within the sacred realm of family privacy," Mr. Armstrong said. Mr. Hyland, in his statement today, said he had concluded "that the judicial review of the Karen Quinlan decision is unwarranted from the standpoint of the state." He added: "I do not see in the decision of the Supreme Court an obvious or immediate danger to the public interest."

However, while he urged hospitals to establish quickly the administrative machinery called for by the decision, Mr. Hyland noted that the 7-to-0 opinion written by Chief Justice Richard J. Hughes had stirred controversy.

"Experience will tell us," Mr. Hyland said, "whether the criteria established by the Supreme Court are workable and wise, or instead whether the standard established is not sufficiently precise." While the Quinlan case may soon come to an end, the debate over its merits may be just beginning.

In its opinion, the court named Joseph T. Quinlan as his daughter's guardian and empowered him to remove the respirator if the attending physicians and an "ethics committee" at the hospital involved agreed there was "no reasonable possibility" that the young woman would recover to a "cognitive, sapient state."

Both Dr. Robert Morse and Dr. Arshad Javed, Miss Quinlan's attending physicians, have said she is in a "chronic or persistent vegetative state," meaning there is no reasonable hope of recovering her ability to function as a human being. This appears to fall well within the guidelines established by the State Supreme Court.

Nobody Is Forced However, Dr. Morse also said during the trial that he would not turn off the respirator, even if directed to do so by a court. Mr. Armstrong said today the court decision "does not force anyone to vegetate state," and said it would be entirely up to the physicians whether they wished to continue their professional relationship with the Quinlan family.

The trustees of St. Clare's Hospital, where Miss Quinlan has been since shortly after she lapsed into a coma April 15, 1975, will meet tomorrow night to discuss the court decision and what they must do to meet its new guidelines.

Ralph Porzio, the lawyer for Drs. Morse and Javed, returned from vacation yesterday and will be conferring with his clients regarding the decision. Mr. Armstrong said he hoped to be able to confer with both the physicians and hospital officials by Friday.

Mrs. Quinlan said the Supreme Court ruling "was a beautiful decision."

"I don't think the justices overlooked anything," she said. "We have so much to be thankful for."

The court based its permission to terminate medical care for terminally ill patients on a newly delineated right of privacy. The court also said anyone acting to terminate medical care in accordance with its guidelines would be immune from civil or criminal liability. Miss Quinlan lapsed into the coma after ingesting tranquilizers and alcoholic beverages during a birthday celebration for a friend. The cost of her treatment is estimated at about $150,000 to date. The bills will be paid out of state Medicaid funds.

Text of Hyland's Statement on Case of Karen Quinlan

Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, April 6—Following is the text of a statement by State Attorney General William F. Hyland on the case of Karen Quinlan:

William F. Hyland

I have concluded that further judicial review of the Karen Quinlan decision is unwarranted from the standpoint of the state. The conclusion, of course, is not binding upon other parties, who will make their own judgments about the acceptability of the Supreme Court decision.

My office intervened in this case when it appeared that Karen's father as plaintiff would contend that the Superior Court of New Jersey should authorize the termination of life-support devices notwithstanding the opposition of Karen's attending physicians. Such contention was in my judgment a threat to recognized traditional medical standards and to the obligation of government to protect life, and particularly the weak and helpless in our society.

Fortunately, the Supreme Court in reversing the decision of the trial court concluded that the responsible attending physicians of a comatose patient must find that there is no reasonable possibility of the patient's never emerging from the comatose condition to a cognitive, sapient state, and that this judgment must be concurred with by an "ethics committee" of the hospital involved. Consequently, I do not see in the decision of the Supreme Court an obvious immediate danger to the public interest.

Experience will tell us whether the criteria established by the Supreme Court are workable and wise, or instead whether the standard established is not sufficiently precise. It is clear from comments made since the decision was released last week that there are medical experts and others who differ with the result. Thus, while the Quinlan case may soon

Frank Everest, a retired Air Force brigadier general and former chief test pilot for the Air Force who test-flew the pioneering X-2 supersonic rocket plane 20 years ago.

In the flights of the purely experimental planes, which were never made operational, General Everest reached a speed of Mach 3, or nearly three times the speed of sound, about 2,000 miles an hour, making him at the time "the fastest man alive"—as his 1957 autobiography was entitled.

The Society of Experimental Test Pilots was founded 20 years ago and is based in Lancaster, Calif. It has about 1,400 members, active or former test pilots. There are three women, notably Jacqueline Cochran, the "Hanna Reitsch" of World War II German aviation, and the general manager of the Society is a man pilot, Billy D. Meier.

The minisymposium weekend gave about 100 members and industry representatives an opportunity to hear updated unclassified reports on several key programs, including a "take-off-and-landing" and the cruise missile also provided members a good opportunity to change notes on their ties and share some which they say is to their work and so

"Pilots like hell to everybody else but to each other," said the group's president, H. C. Rick. "They are well International wing working on the development of the new B-1 military, ber."

After a technical Friday afternoon, pilots attended a cocktail buffet that night, Saturday, and with wives, shipped aboard the Central Island Nursing Home in Plainville, Conn., to produce the records might tend to incriminate them, violating their constitutional rights.

The records have been subpoenaed as part of a non-criminal investigation that has not yet reached the grand jury stage. Sources in the special prosecutor's office emphasized that the records were being sought as part of a general investigation of nursing homes in the state.

Dr. Anton Notey, a physician, at 305 Lindenmeade Drive, Merrick, L.I., and his sons, Richard and Thomas, own and operate the homes as a partnership.

Judge Henry Bramwell refused to sign a temporary restraining order, but he called for Mr. Hines to appear April 15 to show why such an order should not be imposed.

Former Federal Aide Indicted for Fraud

RICHMOND, April 6 (AP)—Thomas F. Regan, ousted head of the Small Business Administration office here, was indicted today in what Federal prosecutors called a "massive scheme to defraud and corrupt" the agency.

Mr. Regan, 47 years old, of Charlottesville, is charged in the 15-count Federal grand jury indictment with two counts of racketeering, 11 counts of accepting bribes and one count each of mail fraud and transporting money obtained through fraud.

He is accused of having provided assistance and approval for $800,000 in loan applications and about $6.8 million in lease guarantee applications, in exchange for $373,300 in cash, services and other goods. The charges carry maximum penalties of a total of 220 years in prison and fines totaling at least $290,000. Mr. Regan, who was dismissed in February 1974, has consistently denied any wrongdoing.

The indictment was the second to be returned by the grand jury, which was convened here last March. The first was against Sanford E. Rafsky of New York and Miami, who has entered a guilty plea to a charge of transporting money obtained through fraud. He is scheduled to be sentenced April 26.

Four alleged "front men" who headed what the Government described as bogus corporations that received loans from the business agency in Mr. Regan's tenure here have pleaded guilty to fraud conspiracy charges and have been sentenced to prison terms ranging from 18 months to two years.

The indictment against Mr.

Regan said he flew to Florida for a meeting with Mr. Rafsky and received paid airline tickets to Las Vegas, the site of alleged discussions about loans from the agency.

The grand jury said Mr. Regan had met with persons who subsequently entered guilty pleas in connection with the planning and execution of the alleged fraud scheme.

General Strike in San Francisco Recommended by Labor Council

SAN FRANCISCO, April 6 (UPI)—Union leaders voted today for a general strike by all union workers employed in the City of San Francisco in a showdown over voter-approved pay limitations on city workers.

John Crowley, head of the San Francisco Labor Council, said the council's executive committee voted to back such a walkout. It would be the first in San Francisco in more than 40 years. No date was set.

Mayor George Moscone said he did not want to "dare" them to have a general strike, but predicted it would not get off the ground. If it does occur, he said, the city has plans to cope with it.

Some 1,700 city employees who belong to "craft" unions, including plumbers, electricians, gardeners and street-sweepers, walked off the job a week ago to protest a new law under which they no longer will get the same pay and benefits as union members in private industry.

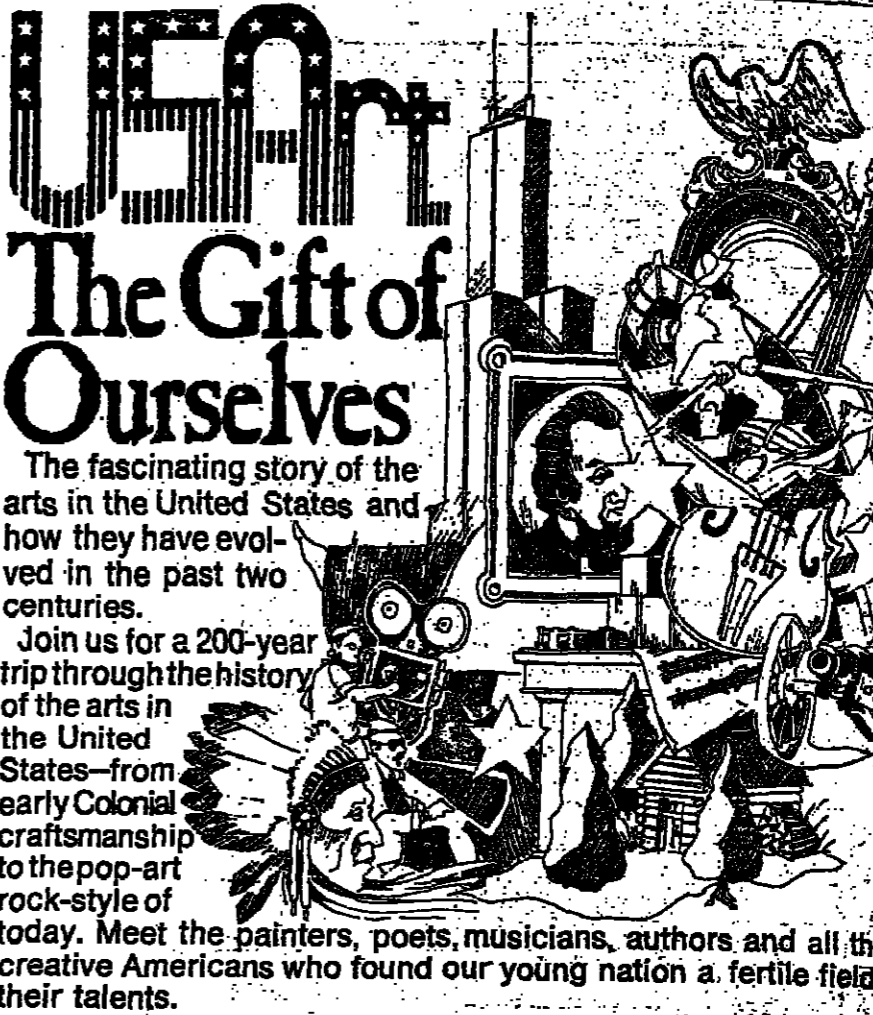

Shipping/Mails Westinghouse Broadcasting Set To Reduce News Staff Abroad

By LES BROWN The Westinghouse Broadcasting Company, which operates WINS in this area and similar all-news radio stations in Philadelphia and Los Angeles, is preparing to reduce substantially its news-gathering forces abroad, which now consist of six bureaus in Europe and the Middle East, and part-time correspondents in other major capitals.

The move will reduce further the dwindling number of primary news-gathering organizations in this country covering foreign affairs. Last November, as an economy measure, Westinghouse cut back its Washington staff from 20 to four full-time workers, with six or seven commentators and specialized reporters working part-time.

Since then, the Westinghouse stations have relied chiefly on A.P. Audio, the "voice" radio service of The Associated Press for coverage of hard news from the capital. A.P. Audio now will also serve as the prime source of foreign news for WINS and the Los Angeles station, KPWB. The Philadelphia station, KYW, will receive its basic foreign and national coverage from the ABC Radio Information Network.

Westinghouse also operates radio stations with conventional music and news formats in four other cities.

"Frontier," with music by Louis Horst and sets by Isamu Noguchi, features Jane Eibei in a solo that Miss Graham explains is "not puritanical at all" but merely reflects an "appetite for space."

In "Appalachian Spring," which Miss Graham says "I could not have done" without the help of Aaron Copland as composer and Isamu Noguchi as designer, she insists that, despite its dark moments, "Appalachian Spring" is a joyous dance.

So what do you call a rabbi's husband?

"Dr. Spare Part" is what they call Wes Dixon. He finds donors... transports body parts where they're needed. Last year, he collected 180 kidneys, 150 corneas, 25 skin patches, 12 pancreas glands and four livers.

Meet Michal Bernstein, one of three woman rabbis in the world. She used to be a professional folk singer... now has all Jewish college students as her congregation... says "I can't be a father figure." Husband Ben's a doctor and like all spouses of rabbis, is a rebbeizen. A doctor and a rabbi? Now that's happiness.

Sandra Paillet's big break came when she was asked by Lauder to create a heart necklace to promote its Runaway Roses line of costume jewelry. Her porcelain jewelry's a runaway hit.

Chevy Chase roasted the President at a recent dinner with quips like, "President Ford accidentally kissed a snowball and threw a baby." To the relief of NBC brass, Ford laughed. Chevy's a Udall man himself.

"Gentle Ben" Crenshaw likes courses "where I can hit the ball as hard as I want." He's having his best year yet, maybe because new wife Polly is scaring off those hordes of gigglers.

Lori Clarke was a nun for 24 years. Now she's an English prof and founder of a college program at Utah State Prison. Marriage? Maybe. But not "until I'd lived with him at least a year."

David Levine thinks caricaturists should be "unsparingly critical of anybody aspiring to political power." He sure is. Jimmy Carter by Levine. He uses photos. "I'd be too embarrassed to draw somebody while he was sitting there."

Dona Fowler Kaminsky is persona non grata at Tiffany's. It seems Tiffany president Hoving ran this ad misquoting Lincoln... she protested... he closed her charge account... she asked Bella Abzug to get it reopened... Understand?

Larry Groce hit the charts with that ballad of gluttony, "Junk Food Junkie." His own favorite snacks are Dr Pepper, Twinkies, and Chee-tos.

Look around you. That's just a taste of the new People... the most surprising magazine in all of magazines.

The surprises are everywhere. In the unexpected people you meet in People's pages. In the way People's audience keeps growing. In the way advertising keeps leaping and bounding.

Ad pages? Already—with the first quarter just ended—more pages of advertising have been ordered for '76 than we ran in all of '75!

Clearly, more and more marketers are catching wise to the fact that People is something entirely new... an audience and a market never available before.

They're a unique mix, those 9,856,000 readers. They're the young, educated, prosperous, urban men and women who set the pace in most everything. People's their special magazine. It's the mid-70's in print and they're the mid-70's people. A beautiful matchup.

Here is the fresh new setting for people products like cars, clothes, cosmetics, appliances, food, travel. And the out-of-pocket cost is so low you can afford real frequency—to take advantage of all that reader involvement.

Want to profit from the new media option? Take a page from our book. Or take a whole campaign. *Publisher's estimate.
